Causes of Present War in Balkans

where, and the delay of the Turkish government in detecting and punishing the culprits (despite the pressure of the Bulgarian government) has helped to bring matters to a crisis.

Then came the partial mobilization for "manoeuvres" by the rival countries, and as the "manoeuvres" were mapped out near the frontiers, the rival states regarded each other's movements as a menace.

Although Serbia has been equally incensed by the news of the massacres the immediate cause of her participation in the present quarrel is the stoppage at Salonika by Turkey of several vanloads of ammunition which were in transit from France to the Serbian capital. Turkey regarded the purchase of ammunition as evidence of hostility to her, and demanded a declaration of amity before the consignments were released.

Serbia, on her part, regarded Turkey's action as a hostile one, and after preliminary diplomatic interchanges declared war.

Greece, too, made a diplomatic incident of the matter at Samos (now in revolt), where a Turkish battery by some bad practice fired at a Greek vessel in the harbor. Montenegro has also had her "diplomatic incident" with Turkey, who complained that some Montenegrins fired on one of her ammunition columns.

The cumulative effect of these and other happenings has brought about the war, but beyond it all the fact must not be lost sight of that Bulgaria, Serbia, Greece and Montenegro entered into a military alliance to take common action in a united attack on Turkey, in the hope of securing home rule for Albania and Macedonia, with a view to their ultimate place in a Balkan federation of their own making.

SPLITS AND SPARES.

Any night some curious man with a mechanical turn of mind can be seen trying to figure out how the ball on the return alley at the Empress loops the loop.

Lockhart wears out a pair of shoes in a surprisingly short time by his manner of dragging a foot when bowling.

Jack Johns is climbing into prominence as a bowler and was overheard last night offering to play a handicap match with a less experienced player.

E. Dansereau is hailed as the original "splitter." His title is not one of his own choosing, and if he had his choice it would be the "original striker."

Wee Jamie Watts is throwing a heavy game and had easy "pickings" last night.

Joe Hickey was overheard explaining how to "English" the ball, but when the player tried to do it he didn't even get a billiard off the corner pin.

HARD BOILED NEWS ITEMS

Mrs. Charles Gillard met with a terrible death at Newmarket, Ont., the other day when the coal oil with which she was endeavoring to light her kitchen fire ignited and burned her to death.

Miss Helen Merrill, an aged lady, unfurled for the second time a historic flag over Brock's grave, near the spot of his death, at Queenston Heights. Seventy-two years separated the time between the first and present occasions on which she unfurled it. The flag, torn and faded, had been placed on Brock's monument by a sailor when it was blown up in 1840.

W. L. Phillips escaped out of jail at Charlottetown, P. E. I., the other day and before doing so rigged up a dummy in his bed. He escaped by means of a key made from an aluminum comb.

When Constable W. A. Smith arrested Alex. Pipinick for stealing peaches he did not reckon that the trial would end in his discomfiture, but he had proved that the policeman had beaten him with his stick and handcuffs before arresting him, and the judge severely censured the "cop."
