SCIENCE in Your Life

Through The Looking Glass

Leeuwenhoek's simple microscope enabled him to find the cells in a piece of cork. His 17th Century optical wonder could magnify objects from 40 to 200 diameters.

This first true miscroscope was crude, but its simplicity challenged the creative abilities of scientists for many generations. It was the father of today's electron microscope—which can magnify minute things more than 100,000 times.

The microscope is a major tool of modern research. Through its eyepiece, scientists have been able to study the makeup of the tissues of man, the life-cycles of disease-causing organisms and the basic structure of chemical compounds.

Recently, scientists for the first time have isolated under the microscope the polio virus. They also believe they have seen a virus that may be the cause of the common cold. Discoveries such as these open the way to the development of new drugs to conquer the disease.

To study tiny and elusive microorganisms, scientists have had to re-arrange light waves. Leeuwenhoek used one lens, curved in a simple arc similar to the one used in spectacles. Daylight provided the illumination needed to study his specimens.

Today's microscope uses two or more lenses of different kinds of glass, each ground to a curve and arranged to bend waves of light a certain way. Special condensers are set to concentrate light and direct it.

The light itself varies with the microscope. Simple high school microscopes use an electric light bulb. In the research laboratory, ultraviolet light or fluorescence may be used. The electron microscope utilizes extremely short waves of electric radiation.

Five Airlines Seek Bombs

NEW YORK (AP)— Five bomb scares Tuesday caused five major airlines to search 36 planes in the United States. No bombs were found but some 1,000 passengers encountered delays of up to an hour.

Trans World Airlines searched 28 planes in a four-hour period after receiving a hoax call at its New York ticket office in early afternoon. Another six planes were ordered out of the air and told to land at their nearest airports.

TWA officials swung into action after an anonymous male telephoned this threat: "There's a bomb on your plane. You better get it off."

Also effected by calls were American Airlines, Delta Airlines and United Airlines.

BIG SCOOPS

VANCOUVER (CP)— Too many future salmon are ending up in the cement-mixer, says G. J. Whitmore, fisheries supervisor. He said gravel contractors should not remove sand from river beds until sure there are no salmon fry or eggs there.
