MOTOR MAIDS

Cringe in Crash, Scientists Say

By Jeanne Smith,
Dodge Safety Consultant

SCIENTISTS in Los Angeles have come up with what they term "the motorists best defense" in the event of a rear-end collision.

Miss Smith

Cringing before and during such a collision, they claim, can very often minimize what otherwise could be serious injuries.

Studying the "whiplash" effects of rear-end collisions upon passengers and driver, UCLA scientists Derwyn Severy and J. H. Mathewson, along with Dr. Charles Bechtol of Yale's Medical College, found that this type of collision at low speed can be vastly more dangerous than those at moderate speed.

These researchers told me that accidents occurring at 10 miles per hour can exert a sudden force of as much as 150 pounds upon the neck and head of occupants in the front seat.

After staging a series of actual tests, the scientists offered this advice:

In all stops, especially abrupt ones, be alert for screeching tires behind you. Glance at the rear view mirror, if you have time, but do not turn around. Cringe if a rear-end collision seems immediate.

This cringing action, which includes hunching the shoulders, helps to reduce "whip" effects on the head, steadies the neck and sometimes prevents serious injuries usually associated with this type of accident.

Lions sign former Rider

VANCOUVER (CP)— B.C. Lions announced today the signing of John W. Dickey, 33, former head trainer of Ottawa Rough Riders, to a 1958 contract.

Mr. Dickey last year was head trainer at Idaho State College.

In addition to his two-year term with the Ottawa Big Four club, he was head freshman trainer at Kansas University for two years.

The Lions said that because of pressure of work Roy Cavellin was unable to return as trainer.

TRAMS VANISH

ABERDEEN, Scotland (CP)—The last of Aberdeen's streetcar lines, which have served the city since the horse-drawn days of 1874, has ceased operations. Its stream-lined double-deck trams have been replaced by buses.

Medical Milestones

When Is a Discovery Useful?

When a scientist discovers something new, people are inclined to ask: What is this discovery good for? What is its practical value? More often than not, these questions cannot be answered or, at least, not right away. For many discoveries are of no immediate use whatever until — sometimes due to a lucky accident — they become important in a way which nobody could foresee. This is particularly true in medicine. Isoniazid, for instance, today one of the most useful drugs in the treatment of tuberculosis, was first produced in 1912. But only a few years ago, it was found that this chemical could fight one of man's worst plagues. Penicillin, the first of the antibiotics, which opened an entirely new era in medicine, was known for over ten years before any attempt was made to exploit its tremendous germ-killing ability.

Something similar happened in the case of the recently developed oral anti-diabetic drugs, the most effective of which is called Orinase. It was in 1942 that a French physician, Dr. Marcel Janbon, in treating patients suffering from typhoid fever with a new sulfa drug, observed unusual reactions in some cases. He consulted his colleague, Prof. Auguste Loubatières, a pathologist, and his research established beyond doubt that certain sulfa drugs were capable of lowering the blood sugar in diabetics.

However, for ten years the scientific world paid little attention to Loubatières' work and only in 1952 was the first attempt made to exploit the anti-diabetic effect of sulfa drugs. Fortunately, for the many diabetics who would like to do away with their inconvenient and often painful insulin injections, progress in this field was quite fast from there on. In 1954 a compound was developed in Germany which was closely related to the sulfa drugs but did not have their germ-killing power. On the other hand, the same drug — now called Orinase — proved in trials on thousands of patients that it would safely and effectively help the majority of diabetics to control their disease, with only very minor side effects.

Prof. Auguste Loubatières

Today, only a few years later, Orinase is available in many countries, including Canada, where it is produced by Hoechst Pharmaceuticals of Montreal. Before being placed on the market, Orinase was tested by 1700 Canadian and U.S. physicians on about 20,000 patients for periods up to 1½ years. This makes it one of the most carefully evaluated drugs in the history of modern medical research.
