WELLINGTON, N.Z. (AP)—Housewives who buy old cabbages might just as well throw them away, said H. C. Hudson, a leading caterer. He told a women's meeting that green vegetables lose about 15 per cent of their vitamin C content every day they are stored.

Simplicity Key For Paris Mode

(By MURIEL NARRAWAY)
Canadian Press Staff Writer

LONDON (CP) — Latest member of the French court of fashion to make a play for the British market is youthful fashion dictator Alwyn, who prefers to be called just that.

Alwyn brings to London lots of advice and four basically simple outfits that would lend enchantment to most figures. He defends this simple approach by saying that women must learn to control their "little madnesses."

An impulsive desire for something gay, foolish and giddy with color must be confined to the "little bits" of nonsense, he says—"the big bow at the neck, the little bright hat or the flower—but always the basic style must be correctly tailored."

Alwyn, a friendly-faced Frenchman, lists this "minimum" for the well-dressed woman—a black suit, a dark grey flannel suit, a tailored shirt dress preferably in neutral tones, a cocktail dress in black silk and two evening gowns—one black, one white.

Shoes and handbags should be black, hats and the "little bits of nonsense" supplying the color interest.

Alwyn says there is one great difference between the English woman the French woman — the waist. French women like to emphasize this by much seaming, stiff petershams, important belts and good girdles. English women prefer to leave the waist to nature.

STANDARD MODELS

Here the the four basic lines that Alwyn offers the English market:

A little black wool "all day" dress, with bell fullness to the skirt, a cross-over diagonal neckline, tiny belt and long narrow sleeve. A diagonal slash to the wide skirt and the corresponding curve to the neckline are emphasized by black velvet trimming and graduated buttons.

A tailored dress suitable for office work or smart afternoon wear, its narrow line set off by diagonal tiers rising from low on the skirt to the rever-cuff, diagonal neckline. Again the sleeve is long and narrow, cut in one with the bodice.

For special occasions a crinkled taffeta theatre dress in caramel with cap sleeves, its plunging neckline emphasized by one deep cuff. The straight line of the skirt is broken by a side panel of fullness that continues the flowing line of the waist-deep neckline.

For evening a billowing froth of tulle dotted with pearls. In several shades of coral and christened "Tour d'Argent," perhaps in honor of a famous Parisian restaurant, this strapless dress sweeps the floor and a full pointed apron front tends to its cloudy appeal.

"Strapless dresses must always be long," said Alwyn, "otherwise they look like a chemise."

One final tip: flowers must be real.
