Terrace theatre group presents pleasing play

The Terrace Little Theatre group staged a highly competent production of the demanding Rudolph Besier play "The Barrett's of Wimpole Street" at the Terrace Civic Centre Saturday night.

A cast of 17 parts must have severely taxed the capacity of the group to fill roles. Three of these parts, Edward Moulton-Barrett, Henrietta Moulton-Barrett, Edward Moulton - Barrett, played by Fergi Kamp, Bette Chasteneauf and Paul Fenger, were played with convincing consistency of characterization throughout the three-act play showed a degree of hard work and ability which speaks well for the group's chances in the forthcoming drama festival in Kitimat next month.

Guy Williams as Robert Browning the poet, played a confident and forceful lover which a variation of stance and right - handed gestures would have heightened. Paul Fenger played the autocratic father with conviction, but with a lack of variation which one might have expected in such a part. The repressive aspects of his character were well brought out and also the essential egotism of the man.

Two other parts — or three, rather — made very good impressions. They were Jill Bunce as Wilson, the maid, Maureen Wold as Arabel Moulton - Barrett and Bella Hedley played by Maja van Weston, were all convincing. Flush, who played himself with complete conviction and aplomb, showed that a dog doesn't need a barking part to steal a scene.

The set adequately suggested an 1845 period drawing room, stage and backlighting was good throughout. Costumes were in keeping with the period and the hirsute makeup of mutton chop whiskers added authenticity to the characters.

Plans for theatrical productions in Prince Rupert are progressing in The Other Group, with a night of one-acts planned and in preliminary stages. The Prince Rupert Little Theatre does not appear, at this stage, to have any plans for a production this year.

It might be a practical suggestion for the Terrace Little Theatre group to bring "The Barretts" here for a one or two-night stand.—J.F.P.
