After the general business sessions, members of the Unemployed Association stayed behind to consider a constitution which had been drawn up by the executive.

A motion that, when the time came men would all go to work under protest pending an answer to the resolution was carried by an overwhelming majority, there being only three dissenting votes.

Workers R. Redman, W. Brown and James Smith were appointed a grievance committee to arbitrate when necessary on behalf of the association.

The case of a local business man who has been good enough to extend credit was also brought up. It is estimated that there is between $40,000 and $50,000 owing which there is little or no chance of collecting under the present scheme.
