BLACKWOOD on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

In recent columns I have pointed out the main requisites for a sound opening bid of two in a suit. Briefly, I have recommended that you should have:

1. A minimum of four high card tricks.

2. The ability to win within one trick of game without help from partner.

3. Solidity in your principal suit or suits.

These are not "rules." They are not arbitrary yardsticks decided upon at random in an effort to standardize opening two bids. They are merely conclusions based upon common sense and experience in actual play.

Mr. Champion

In today's deal Mr. Muzzy violated recommendation No. 3. Note that his principal suit, clubs, was composed of A K 6 5 4. That suit would have won just two tricks if his left hand opponent had held Q J 10 9 8 in clubs. Take the diamond suit, too, in which Mr. Muzzy held A Q 6. If partner had nothing, there were two diamond losers.

Now substitute the J 10 9 of clubs for Mr. Muzzy's three small ones and substitute the jack of diamonds for the six spot.

By adding three "Unimportant" honors, namely, two jacks and a ten, we have increased the trick-taking ability of the hand by three full tricks.

Of course, Mr. Muzzy violated recommendation two, also. He had nowhere near the strength to take within one trick of game.

He was swayed, undoubtedly, by the fact that he held 5½ high card tricks. But high card tricks alone are by no means the only consideration in deciding whether to open with a two bid.

In this hand the defenders quickly rattled off five spade tricks. Mr. Champion could not get to his hand to take a diamond finesse, the clubs failed to break evenly and when the smoke cleared away the contract was down four.

"Will you tell me?" asked Mr. Champion in a strangled voice, "why you opened that hand with a two bid?"

"Well, I was afraid you'd pass," replied Mr. Muzzy lamely.

Mr. Champion hit himself in the head. "That," he remarked, "is the explanation of the year. Even you must be able to see how much better we'd have been if I HAD passed . . . Your hand took five tricks. Now if I had enough stuff to win the other four, don't you think I'd keep your one bid open?"

Unanswerable. Except by Mr. Muzzy. "I still say I had a terrific hand," he said.
