TRAPPING TIPS

A WISE TRAPPER WEARS RUBBER BOOTS, NOT ONLY TO KEEP HIS FEET DRY, BUT RUBBER WON'T LEAVE "TELL-TALE" SCENT AT A TRAP SITE. HE TAKES CARE NOT TO TRACK OIL, ETC., FROM HIGHWAYS, OR MANURE FROM A FIELD TO A SITE FOR FOX, COYOTE, AND OTHER KEEN-NOSED FUR BEARERS. HE RINSES FOREIGN MATTER OFF BY WADING.

CLEAN RUBBER GLOVES LEAVE NO SCENT IN SETTING A TRAP. THEN GLOVES ARE REMOVED AND USED FOR NO OTHER PURPOSE. STERILE TRAPS ARE NOT TOUCHED EXCEPT WITH THESE GLOVES.

A WISE TRAPPER'S TOOL HANDLES, CLOTHING, ETC., NEVER TOUCH GROUND. HE WON'T DROP CIGARETTE ASH, OR SPIT NEAR SITES.

IN MINORITY
VICTOSIA (CP) — Girls are in the minority in British Columbia. Vital statistics for the 1959-60 fiscal year show there were 808,200 males and 761,800 females.

BLACKWOOD on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

In deciding whether or not to open a hand with a forcing bid, here is the question to ask yourself: "Is there a holding my partner could reasonably be expected to have which he would pass opposite my one bid—yet which would give me a good play for game?" If the answer is "no," then a two bid is not in order.

To put it another way, you are justified in opening with a two bid if your hand will come within one trick of making game without any help whatsoever from partner.

Of course you should have a type of hand whose trick-taking possibility is easy to calculate—that is, a principal suit like K Q J 10 9, which will take four tricks.

Mr. Masters

Who can tell how many tricks can be won by a suit like A K 4 3 2? Nobody, and therefore this type of holding does not belong in an opening two bid.

You should usually have at least half the deck in high cards. Partner will count on you for that much and may start doubling the opponents prematurely if they come into the bidding.

Considering his hand for a two bid in today's deal, Mr. Masters thought there were a number of hands his partner could hold which would not qualify as a response to an opening one bid and yet would furnish enough to round out a ten-trick game at hearts.

The queen of spades would do it — or a doubleton spade and several small trumps. The king of clubs would be satisfactory. A singleton club would serve the purpose. Or Mr. Meek could have one of the red aces and no other honor cards. (He is not one to stretch to keep the bidding open.)

All in all, Mr. Masters felt he would have to be extremely unlucky to find the dummy hand absolutely worthless.

Mr. Meek, with his pitiful holding, naturally took a gloomy view of the proceedings. Even with a partner like Mr. Masters he expected to go set at four hearts.

But when Mr. Dale failed to open a trump, Mr. Meek's hand won two tricks and Mr. Masters made five-odd.

He won the opening spade lead with dummy's queen and took a club finesse immediately. When this held he cashed the ace of clubs and his two top spades, discarding the last club from dummy. He ruffed his last club and lost only the two red aces.

Baboons make odd guests

JERSEY CITY, N.Y. (AP) — This is a story about the five baboons who came for the weekend and stayed nine days.

Dr. Clarence Manziano, a veterinarian, had Bingo, Bango, Bongo, Mike and Little Sam as house guests.

All but Little Sam left Monday as a shipping mix-up was finally straightened out.

The monkeyshines in the Manziano household started February 4.

A truck driver brought the baboons into the city by mistake in making a delivery for the Eastern Primate Corporation of North Bergen, N.J. By the time he found out the error, it was too late to return them to the company and he had to find a place to board them.

Manziano took in the baboons with the understanding they would be picked up after the weekend.

The veterinarian didn't know what company owned the animals. And when Monday came and no truck arrived he didn't know what to do.

Bingo, Bango, Bongo, Mike and Little Sam lived it up and endeared themselves to the Manziano children.

Finally Manziano asked the New York Daily News for help. The paper published a story telling of his plight.

Richard Bertoli, president of Eastern Primate, read it. He called an express company to have the baboons picked up and had not realized they were still with Manziano, he said.

common to see them come from a hunt with two or with only one empty shell to show. The trick was to maneuver around to a point where the neck of one animal would be brought in line with the body of another thereby dropping the two with one shot.

Occasionally, ammunition would become scarce. In such a case, dogs would be used to run game off the beach into the water where it would be dispatched by striking the animal at the base of the skull with the blade of an oar, endwise.

The long winter months were times of constant forage, and these men would inform us to just what rocks and reefs to fish for tommy-cod, where the best clam beds were to be found, and at what spots to look for abalone. At extreme low tide, this last-named shell fish being rather scarce, and only to be found in a few localities.

These were the hardy men I will never forget. These were men who showed courage in times of peril, always remained cool-headed in an emergency, thoughtful of their fellowmen's problems, and compassionate to others in times of sorrow. These men left a deep impression in the growing up period of our young lives. They are all gone now to that Great Beyond, and I take off my hat and bow my head in deep respect to their memory, with a lump in my throat and a prayer in my heart.
