Burns Bachelor's club principles praised at Presbyterian banquet

Many modern clubs could follow the principles laid down by Scottish poet, Robert Burns, for his famous Bachelor's Club, said E. T. Applewhaite in his address to "The Immortal Memory" at the Burns Banquet at the First Presbyterian Church Wednesday night.

He was referring to the rules of conduct, not to the qualifications of entry.

Approximately 180 persons packed the church hall as W. D. Sutherland piped in the haggis, carried by Murdo McLeod, to the place of honor at the head table where George Murray paid it the traditional Burns tribute.

Mr. Applewhaite's address dealt with the later life of the Scottish poet and his "war with the kirk" and said he thought the poet was responsible for many of the changes which occurred in the "corrupt" church of those times, bringing happiness, smiles and cheerful songs. Burns, said Mr. Applewhaite, was the enemy of hypocrisy.

William Bisset spoke strongly in favor of "The Lassies," while Mrs. P. C. Cullen replied to the toast.

The Ladies Aid of the First Presbyterian Church prepared the banquet, the notable feature of which was, of course, the celebrated haggis. The menu, which needed an interpreter in parts, featured such Highland items as trimmlin' geordie, wizened grossets, clachan yill, ait bannocks wi' a wee bit kebbuck, bubblyjock and grumphie.

Banquet chairman, the Rev. Ivan S. Gamble, led the singing with "The Star of Robbie Burns." An octette composed of Mrs. H. M. McLeod, soloist, Mrs. Graham Alexander, Mrs. R. Hammond, Mrs. N. R. Stromdahl, David Owens, E. J. Smith, Mr. Gamble, Nels Cummins and Mrs. E. J. Smith, chairman of the entertainment, at the piano, sang two of Burns compositions "Green Grow the Rashes O," and "John Anderson, My Jo." Mr. H. W. Robb delivered a speech in tribute to Canada following William Symington's amusing tribute to "Bonnie Scotland" and "puir, honest, but foreign liquid."

John Frew recited William Sutherland's "Ode Tae a Mortgage." A short one-act play "The Haggis of Private McPhee" was staged and the evening concluded with the community singing of "Sweet Afton," "Scots Wha Hae" and "Auld Lang Syne."

FRENCH COSTUME JEWELRY MADE OF SUEDE, FABRICS

PARIS (Reuters) — The newest trends in French costume jewelry turn the spotlight on such unusual items as fabrics, suede and passementerie.

Necklaces are made of velvet or satin motifs studded with tiny stones. Beads are worked in new effects of coiled braiding; while classic gold metal sportswear jewelry is replaced by suede mountings and frames.

Pierre Cardin is one of the leading advocates of fabric jewelry, made according to his own designs by the specialized firm of Dacmo. Lavalieres and Sautoirs feature chunky balls the size of pigeons' eggs, covered in velvet and strung on a fine gilt chain. Variations are silk yarn pompons, or braiding and passementerie — decorated lace — used to make outsize beads.

Cardin shows triple strand choker collars made of two twisted silk cords intertwined with one matching colored strand of cut glass stones.
