FORMBY IN FUN FILM

"South American George" Coming Today and Thursday

"South American George," coming today and Thursday to the Capitol Theatre, presents George Formby, famous English music hall star, in the role of a hapless "goof" whose ambition is to go on the stage. He lands a job with an opera company as an "extra," but later, when the show's very temperamental tenor star walks out in a huff, George, because of his strong likeness to the singer, is persuaded to impersonate him. The consequences are hilarious in the extreme, especially when George is forced to sing in opera for which he has neither the tongue nor the tenor voice. Stage-hating parents, a crotchety impresario, a gang of crooks and a million and one hilarious complications beset the unfortunate George, making "South American George" great laugh-entertainment.

In the picture, Formby sings four big hit numbers specially written for the production and, his inevitable ukelele is very much to the fore. One of these numbers, "I'll Do It With A Smile," is a catchy, haunting melody. Other outstanding tunes are "Swing Mama," "My Spanish Guitar," and a typical Formby comedy number, "The Barman at the Rose and Crown."
