SEA GOING CAPTAIN AND FAMILY TAKE TO AIR — Leaving for New York yesterday by CPA plane is Captain C. Family sees world with father aboard Greek-registered freighter

Travelling around the world on a freighter with your captain father can be very educational besides "lots of fun", said the two very attractive daughters of Captain C. Valsamides of Athens, Friday afternoon just prior to the Greek registered freighter Castor's departure.

Constant change is routine to the Valsamides.

The Castor in port for her second cargo of grain left for Red China skippered by new captain, Nickolas Vuyuclis, leaving the Valsamides family to return to Greece aboard a different freighter. This they will join in New York.

Blond and youthful looking Madame Valsamides, who has been sailing with her husband for years, made her first visit to Canada 25 years ago in Montreal.

Zorais, 25 and Virginia, 22, began sailing with their father several years ago, but not until they had received extensive schooling.

Both girls attended private schools in England and are specialized as interpreters of Greek, French and English receiving their degrees at the University of Geneva.

Virginia said she thinks working at the United Nations headquarters in Geneva as an interpreter would be most interesting. She likes America, she said but still would prefer to live and work in Europe.

"However the country in and around Prince Rupert is very much like Switzerland, it is beautiful," she said.

Virginia also thought the icebergs they passed around Japan were beautiful and exciting, but Madame Valsamides had to admit she felt differently.

Captain Valsamides however much he has enjoyed his family with him, thinks he'll leave them at home for the next trip.

They left yesterday by Canadian Pacific Airlines plane, thereby taking a different route to New York and seeing more new places and faces.
