YOUNGSTERS VERSATILE

The versatility of the Wednesday's craft club members with Junior, Teenage and Adult members participating at the Civic Centre knows no bounds. As there is a shortage of bead looms at present owing to a delayed shipment, many of the little girls who attended the class in the afternoon were disappointed at not being able to have their equipment. However, quite undaunted, they took to the art of weaving and leathercraft temporarily and put in a profitable afternoon. Book marks and pot holders were the projects completed and several young members excelled in the art of tooling their names and different designs on leather. Judy Lloyd, Janet Taylor, Pat Pierce and others were very busy.

At the same time the more fortunate ones were busy on their bead projects learning to securely fasten each bead on with two threads or darning in the final threads of a wrist bracelet. Marylin Farmer started a new bracelet. Donna Mosley finished her first design showing flying birds on a colored background while Julie Prockter and Suzanne Kergin, working together, shared beads and design ideas.

Combined with all this activity, several ladies of the afternoon craft class which meets Wednesday and Thursday for a social craft hour, were quite busy working and planning gifts for Christmas.

Starting the same evening, the craft room was again crowded. Enthusiastic Teenage boys numbering 20 were feverishly anxious to learn the tricks of the leather trade and accomplish as much in the short two hour period allotted them on Wedneday nights. These classes are open to all Civic Centre members.

Volunteer workers would be most welcome as greater progress could be made with ants who would he threading of needles and the tracing of p
