BLACKWOOD on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Figuring the players is as important as figuring the cards. In today's deal Mr. Muzzy got a spade opening and obviously was able to make a grand slam with tricks to spare.

It appears that Mr. Dale was guilty of overcautiousness. But the old master knew what he was doing. He lost points on this particular hand but he knew that the tactics he used would gain many more points in the long run.

As soon as the play was over Mr. Heinsite was right in there with the criticism as usual. "How could you fail to bid seven no trump, Dale?" he inquired. "When Muzzy re-bid hearts you surely could have figured him for six hearts to the ace-king. Then, later, when he bid five no trump, that showed your side had all the aces.

Mr. Dale

"After that you could count 13 tricks in either hearts or no trump. I say your correct bid over the five no trump call was seven no trump."

Mr. Dale suppressed a temptation to say, "Who asked you?" His chief concern was not to win an argument with Mr. Heinsite but to win a rubber of bridge with Mr. Muzzy as his partner.

He realized that on the bidding he got from his partner he would have been justified in going for the grand slam. He would have done so if his partner had been Mr. Masters or Mr. Champion.

But with Mr. Muzzy across the table there was a question as to whether the bids made on the North cards could be completely trusted. Mr. Dale was not willing to take the risk.

While he missed the grand slam bonus in this deal, the fact remains that he gets getter results playing with Mr. Muzzy than does any other player.

There are several reasons why this is so. First, he keeps his criticism to himself and that makes Mr. Muzzy co-operative—and less confused.

Second, he tries to confine his bids and plays to those which Mr. Muzzy will be likely to understand. And that is keeping it pretty simple.

I am going to show you some hands where these tactics paid off.
