BLACKWOOD on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

If you can picture the bedlam involved in hitching the tortoise and the hare to the same cart, you have the imagination to appreciate the recounting of a rubber in which Mr. Meek and Miss Brash were partners.

According to any system you ever heard of, Mr. Meek's hand in this, the first deal of the rubber, called for stronger treatment than a mere single raise of partner's heart bid. You would expect even a fairly timid player to make a response of two diamonds, planning to raise hearts on the next round. This is the standard procedure for showing a hand too strong for a single raise and not quite strong enough for a double raise.

An aggressive player would go straight to three hearts, a game force. It's close but there is a great deal to be said for this action on the hand. True, points allowed for conditions are the poorest points of all but this slight defect was more than offset by the fine third all of Mr. Meek's high card points were in aces and kings.

Miss Brash

You might even make a case for a jump to four hearts on the North hand. The high card content is a little strong for this action but you would be making it hard for the opposition to find a good save, if they had one. As you see, Mr. Abel and Mr. Champion would have suffered only a one-trick set at four spades.

But why theorize? Mr. Meek plays the Meek system and it was modern then (and) when he plays with a lady hidden like Miss Brash. Here, the conditions had another bid on the South cards, with only a single raise from partner.

She made four hearts easily although she had to recognize and [illegible] trick one. The seven-if spades forever.

Opening Lead: Seven of spades was led, Mr. Champion played the king and Miss Brash promptly ducked. She could afford to lose a spade trick but she could not afford a lead through dummy's king of clubs.

She won the spade return with the ace, picked up the trumps in two tricks, led the queen of diamonds and took the finesse. It lost to the king but the ace of clubs was the only other trick Mr. Champion could take. Two clubs from the closed hand could be discarded on dummy's diamonds.

If Miss Brash had won the first trick with the ace of spades she would have made one trick less. When the diamond finesse lost to Mr. Champion, he could have returned his partner's hand with a spade and the diamond club return would have netted the defenders two tricks in that suit. Ducking the first spade gives Mr. Abel out of the lead [illegible]
