BLACKWOOD on Bridge

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

False-Carding Will Fool Partner More Than Declarer

When Mr. Muzzy wins a trick with a king when he could have won it with a queen, he is not trying to fool anybody. He is not consciously false-carding. That's just the way he plays. But he's a devil with a holding of queen-jack doubleton. He's really tricky here. He always follows suit with the queen when declarer leads the ace.

Of course, this sort of thing is bound to have its moments. Now and then it will pick up a trick. But you will find that indiscriminate false-carding will fool partner more often than it will mislead declarer.

Both Mr. Dale and Mrs. Keen false-carded in today's hand to flim-flam Mr. Champion out of his six-spade contract. Each felt with "normal" defensive play, Mr. Champion would make his slam and that desperate measures were therefore justified.

The king of hearts was opened. It appeared to Mr. Champion that a successful squeeze play would be necessary to bring in 12 tricks and to set the stage, he left the king of hearts win.

Mrs. Keen then led the queen of hearts and dummy's ace won Three rounds of trumps were cashed and Mr. Dale discarded his two remaining hearts.

Next came dummy's two top diamonds and a third diamond which Mr. Champion ruffed. On this last trick, Mr. Dale played the queen of diamonds. As he hoped, Mr. Champion then placed the jack in Mrs. Keen's hand.

On the following lead of a trump, Mrs. Keen dropped the deuce of hearts, the fur of clubs went on from dummy and Mr. Dale played the trey of clubs. The last trump brought the 10 of clubs from Mrs. Keen. The now useless ten of diamonds was played from the board and Mr. Dale threw another club.

Now Mr. Champion led a small club to dummy's king. Holding queen-jack alone at this point, Mrs. Keen promptly dropped the queen. Can you blame Mr. Champion for picturing her last two cards as the high heart and the jack of diamonds?

Feeling sure he had the hand cased accurately, he returned a small club and finessed his nine spot. Mrs. Keen won with the lone jack and cashed her good heart for a two trick set.
