BLACKWOOD on Bridge

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Mr. Muzzy Proves Right at Wrong Time and Vice Versa in Tight Play

Mr. Muzzy is right at the wrong time. And vice versa. Sitting behind Mr. Champion in today's deal, he heartily disapproved of the great man's defence.

Mr. Champion's opening lead was the king of clubs and he noted his partner's play of the deuce. He cashed the ace of clubs, felling Mrs. Keen's queen, and then paused to consider his next play.

After some thought he led a third club, the jack. It was here that Mr. Muzzy took his nose delicately between thumb and forefinger to indicate that, in his opinion, the defence had fallen apart.

GIVES A RUFF

"That's just what he tells me not to do," he whispered to another kibitzer. "He's giving Mrs. Keen a sluff and a ruff."

But of course Mr. Champion knew what he was doing. Dummy's diamonds were almost solid. And Mrs. Keen could not have opened the bidding without the ace of spades.

In other words it seemed clear that the sluff and ruff would do declarer no good because she had no further side suit losers to get rid of.

Thinking far ahead, Mr. Champion had in mind promoting his nine of trumps into the setting trick. All he asked was to find his partner with any heart honor.

HAND DEVELOPS

Here is how the hand developed. Mrs. Keen ruffed the third club lead on the board and discarded the four of spades from her hand. She led a heart and played the jack. Mr. Champion won with the ace and fired a fourth club.

He had a bad moment while Mr. Abel thought about what to play. Eventually Mr. Abel came through, ruffing with the 10 of hearts. It took Mrs. Keen's queen to win this trick and now Mr. Champion's guarded nine of hearts was bound to be a winner.

"Muzzy," said Mr. Champion, "if you can find a better defence than mine on this hand, I'll call you a very fine bridge player. And when I say that," he added with an evil grin, "I'm extremely sure of my ground."
