BLACKWOOD on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Sacrificing One Ttrick Makes Hold-Up Easy

Sometimes the proper use of the hold-up play involves giving up a trick you could have won. Such a situation arose in today's deal where Mr. Muzzy was playing a sound and makeable contract of three no-trump.

Miss Brash, a rugged individualist in all departments of the game, decided against opening a club, the suit her partner had bid. Instead, she led the six of spades.

The four was played from the board, Mr. Abel put up the king and Mr. Muzzy won with the ace. As you see, this play guaranteed the defeat of the contract.

At trick two Mr. Muzzy led a small heart and finessed the nine. Mr. Abel won with the king and returned the trey of spades. Quite properly, Miss Brash held up the queen and dummy's jack won.

But Mr. Muzzy was not yet in a position to run off nine tricks. He had won two spades and now could cash four hearts and two diamonds, finessing the queen of that suit. That was one trick short. He had to get one club trick and when he led that suit Mr. Abel went right in with the ace and returned his last spade. Miss Brash cashed three spades to put the hand down one.

Winning play was to duck the first two rounds of spades. Admittedly, the necessity for this was a little hard to see, especially since it deliberately gave up all chance of taking two spade tricks.

However, since Mr. Abel had opened the bidding, it was extremely likely that he held the king of hearts and the ace of clubs. The lead would have to be surrendered twice, then, before Mr. Muzzy would have nine tricks set up.

Mr. Muzzy should have used my suggested "rule" concerning the hold-up. That is, the hold-up is indicated unless the number of stoppers in the danger suit is one more than the number of tinies you must lose the lead. Even Mr. Muzzy had to admit that it was better to win only one spade trick but a total of nine, than to win two spade tricks and a total of eight.
