Blackwood on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

"Nice guess in the club suit," said Mr. New, the avid kibitzer, after Miss Brash made her four-spade contract.

"That was no guess. That was a sure thing," Miss Brash replied.

She was right and this is a good illustration of how counting a hand can eliminate guesswork.

First let me say that Miss Brash's four-spade bid is not recommended. And I might add that my recommendations—or anybody's—make absolutely no impression on Miss Brash.

Her problem in today's deal was to determine whether Mr. Dale had the lone jack of clubs or the doubleton queen jack of clubs. This she solved neatly and scientifically.

Miss Brash

Mr. Dale won the first trick with the king of hearts and Mr. Abel started an echo with the nine. The ace of hearts followed and Mr. Abel played the four.

Mr. Dale's third heart lead was not another honor but the trey and the purpose of this was to try to suggest to Mr. Abel that he should ruff with his highest trump. Mr. Abel co-operated by ruffing with the queen of spades.

Miss Brash had an effective countermove for this. She suspected that if she overruffed, that action would promote an eventual winner in the trump suit for Mr. Dale. So she simply discarded the five of diamonds.

She won the return of the queen of diamonds with the ace and cashed her four top trumps, discarding two clubs from dummy. Next she cashed the ace of clubs and saw the jack drop on her left. She could now play the king of clubs hoping to drop the queen or she could go to dummy, return a club and finesse the ten.

She didn't have to guess. All she had to do was to lead a diamond to dummy's king and that gave her the answer.

Mr. Abel had started with two hearts, so Mr. Dale had six. Mr. Dale had followed suit to four leads of spades. That left him with only three cards in the minor suits. He had followed to one club lead. And when he showed up with a second diamond he simply couldn't have any more clubs unless it was a faulty deck.

Miss Brash led a club from the board and finessed the ten with complete confidence. This is what Mr. New called a "guess." But if you use this particular kind of guesswork you will never lose a finesse again.

Stampeders nearing leaders

By The Canadian Press

Calgary Stampeders who have played 34 Western Hockey League games against Edmonton's 39, forged to within two points of the first-place Flyers after Wednesday's action.

In their ninth straight victory the Stamps defeated Seattle Totems 5-2. Totems were at the end of an eight-game Prairie swing in which they managed only two victories.

Spokane Flyers meanwhile stayed a point ahead of Victoria in the coast standings when the two teams battled through overtime and failed to break a 4-4 tie.

Centre Eddie Dorohoy of Calgary continued his chase of leading WHL point-getter Guyle Fielder of Seattle in the Calgary game. He earned three assists on the night's play, against one for Fielder. Dorohoy is four points behind the leader. Rino Robazza, Dusty Blair, Howie Glover, Bill Hay and Don Ward scored for Calgary.

Val Fonteyne and Tom McVie tallied for Seattle.

fields very close to his heart, in labor matters and in the field of forestry. In both these fields his knowledge was recognized as outstanding on the continent."

It was Mr. Sloan who suggested, after his royal commission in 1945, that some system of licensing be started for forest management.

Ten years later he was investigating the industry once more when he heard the charges that the then forest minister, Robert Sommers, was taking bribes. He refused to listen saying the allegations were not in the terms of his commission.

But two years later he was again investigating the forest industry with the allegations against Sommers as his prime target. It was the only commission on which he did not have to report.

Criminal charges against Sommers and others came while his commission was adjourned. A month later he was formally relieved of the job.

Mr. Sloan was born in Nanaimo. His father, Hon. William Sloan, held seats in both the provincial and federal Parliaments, and was provincial secretary and minister of mines for a decade.

In private life, Mr. Sloan kept to himself. He was associated with few clubs and organizations and he preferred to stay home at nights reading in his library.

Survivors include his wife, a son and a daughter, all of Victoria.
