Morning Weariness and Thyroid Deficiency

People who feel fatigued when arising in the morning after a sound sleep, and then slowly recover stamina during the day and feel brightest and most energetic when it's time to return to bed at night, may be suffering from a mild thyroid deficiency described by doctors as "the hypometabolic state."

Some of these people chronically complain of vague aches and pains, and have been labeled unjustly as hypochondriacs, neurotics, or anxiety personalities.

Actually the chemical processes in their bodies which convert food into energy are operating at a snail's pace. Doctors believe that the slowdown results from a shortage of thyroid hormone in body tissues.

Other commonly encountered symptoms indicating this form of hypothyroidism may be an intolerance to cold, brittle nails, dry skin, lack of perspiration and, in women, menstrual disorders.

In a seven year study conducted by Dr. B. A. Watson of Clifton Springs, N. Y., published recently in the New York State Journal of Medicine, it was found that women are much more prone to this state than men, and also that its incidence increases with age.

Of almost 15,000 patients admitted for various complaints to the Clifton Springs Clinic and Sanitarium, Dr. Watson found that more than 200 were suffering from the hypometabolic state. The highest rate was among patients in their forties and fifties. In Dr. Watson's opinion: "Physicians should consider the diagnosis of hypometabolic state before labeling a chronically complaining patient as a psychoneurotic, hypochondriac, anxiety state, etc."

The investigation confirmed the growing belief that a subnormal metabolic rate is not the only indication of thyroid deficiency as had been generally assumed. The morning tiredness, aches and pains were much more reliable signs of the condition. Trial treatment with dried thyroid given orally was found to be a reliable method of diagnosis. If the symptoms disappeared, the hypometabolic state was presumed present.

Continued treatment with dried thyroid, or with a purified thyroid extract in tablet form called Proloid, produced lasting improvement in a majority of patients, restoring a feeling of complete well-being in very many. As a test, treatment was discontinued temporarily in a few patients. Their symptoms returned almost immediately, but were controlled again when treatment was resumed

Swedish Sport, Orienteering, Becomes Popular

TORONTO (—Latest sport to catch attention is a form of cross-country running in which the participant ends up right where he started.

If this sounds a little futile, then you should talk to William Salo of Silva Co. Ltd., a strong advocate of the Swedish sport.

"It's the same idea as a sports car rally, but a little more tiring," says Salo who spends much of his spare time lecturing on the little-known recreation to camp counsellors and school teachers.

"We haven't had too much success with adults yet because we're up against the automobile, but the Boy Scouts and some of the younger groups are really taking to it," he added.

RUGGED OR PLEASANT

Orienteering is the official name, meaning the art of navigating through strange terrain with map and compass. It can be a rugged expedition, with overnight hikes of 40 or 50 miles, or a pleasant Sunday afternoon outing, says Salo.

Equipment consists of a compass, topographical map, protractor, and a little pioneering instinct.

If no competition is involved, you mark in a few arbitary points on a map of the district, and hike from spot to spot, eventually returning to the starting point. In competition, the only difference is that the route is run instead of walked.

At present the sport is booming in summer camps.

"In Sweden, it's become a national sport like baseball or hockey," declared Salo.

7 Boys Killed By Avalanche

BANFF, Alta. (CP) — Seven American boys, attempting to climb one of the highest mountains in the Canadian Rockies were killed Monday, when an avalanche of snow swept them down Mount Temple. Two others were injured, two escaped.

The boys, aged 13 to 16, were caught almost 10,000 feet up the mountain, while attempting what veteran alpinists termed one of the most difficult climbs in the Rockies. They had given up the climb more than 1,000 feet from the summit and just started the return trip to their supply camp when caught in the avalanche.

They were carried 300 feet. Five bodies were found in rescue searches Monday. The RCMP announced that at noon today that two other boys previously reported missing were dead.

The two injured boys were brought to hospital here in serious conditions with head injuries and suffering from shock and exposure.

One of the boys camp leaders, O. D. Dickinson, who was not in the party of 11 that attempted the climb, also is in hospital suffering from shock.
