BLACKWOOD on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Even Mr. Heinsite could find no fault with the scientific bidding which led to today's small slam contract. But he was far from happy with the play.

Mr. Abel gave some thought to the opening lead of the jack of hearts. He knew Mrs. Keen was capable of leading away from a king against a slam and he was tempted to let the lead ride to his queen. However, to avoid the storm of criticism he would get from his partner if he lost the first two tricks, he decided to go up with dummy's ace.

6 ♠	All Pass

Opening lead: Jack of hearts.

He took three rounds of trumps and noted with satisfaction that the suit broke favorably. Now he cashed four rounds of diamonds, getting rid of his last heart. Next came the king of clubs from dummy.

Mr. Heinsite

Here Mrs. Keen made a good defensive play. If she won with the ace of clubs, the slam would be made easily. But she elected to play low. This surprising development stumped Mr. Abel, as well it might. He had to get another club trick and that involved reaching his hand twice—once to lead the queen of clubs to drive out the ace and another time to cash the pack.

He had only one entry—his last trump. He led a small heart from the board and ruffed it. Then he led the jack of clubs, hoping it wouldn't be covered. But Mrs. Keen put up the ace and dummy ruffed. On a heart return from dummy Mr. Dale went up with the king and cashed the eight spot for the setting trick.

"Do you think you're playing with children?" demanded Mr. Heinsite. "You should have known they wouldn't help you by taking the ace on the first round of clubs. The hand was easy. Just pull two rounds of trumps, then lead four rounds of diamonds and discard your last heart. Your only chance was that the opponent with the long trump holding also has as many as four diamonds.

"Next lead the king of clubs. If Mrs. Keen holds off, you ruff a heart to get to your hand and lead the queen of clubs. If it isn't covered, it wins. If it is covered, you ruff on the board and you still have a trump to get back to your hand again."
