Blackwood on BRIDGE

The textbooks on bidding tell you that when you have 26 points in high cards in the partnership, you will have a good play for three no trump. I have no desire to argue with that. It is true more often than not.

But remember that 26 points is just about the minimum strength necessary for game and leaves no margin for error.

After you get to game on this little power, you still have to play right to score it.

Here is a hand with 28 points in high cards, including all four aces, and yet it took a favorable opening lead and a tricky play by Mr. Dale to bring home nine tricks.

Mr. Abel opened the king of hearts and, with the guarded jack in dummy, it appeared practically certain that two heart tricks would be available. But Mr. Dale needed seven more tricks. Four diamonds and the two black aces made a total of eight.

Mr. Dale

If Mr. Abel had the king of spades, the ninth trick could be made by leading up to dummy's queen. And if Mrs. Keen had the king of clubs, the club finesse would do the job.

But what if both black kings were wrong? In that case it would be fatal if Mr. Dale led a small heart at trick two and Mr. Abel won with the queen and switched to a spade.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 N.T.	Pass	3 N.T.	All Pass

Opening lead: King of Hearts.

Suppose a diamond were led to dummy at trick two and a club returned for a finesse of the queen. If Mr. Abel had the king he would certainly win with it and again there would be the danger of a spade shift.

With these thoughts in mind, Mr. Dale deferred setting up the jack of hearts. Instead, he led a low club toward dummy.

If this lost to Mrs. Keen, he would have two club tricks set up.

And a spade lead from her side of the table would not be dangerous. He could play low and even if the king of spades turned up on his left, he would have the next two tricks in the suit.

If Mr. Abel had the king of clubs, he might not play it. The advisability of winning at this point would not be nearly as clear-cut as in the case where he was playing last to the trick.

Mr. Dale had given himself the best chance. Mr. Abel saw no reason to rush in with the king of clubs this early in the proceedings.

He ducked and dummy's jack won. Now, with two club tricks available, Mr. Dale returned to his hand with the king of diamonds and led a small heart to establish dummy's jack for his ninth trick.
