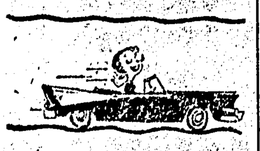
MOTOR MAIDS



Bad Drivers Blacklisted

By Jeanne Smith,
Dodge Safety Consultant

BOYFRIENDS with bad-driving habits are up against strong feminine opposition in Livonia, a Detroit suburb of 40,000. They're being boycotted by GASAFETY.

The abbreviation stands for "Girls' Automobile Safety Assn. for Educating Youth." Members of this newest threat to unruly hotrods and crazy "chicken" drivers are all between the ages of 16 and 21.

They meet once a month to discuss ways and means of curbing youthful motorized mayhem and to learn more about how a car operates. Safety lectures by automotive engineers and police officers teach them what good drivers should do to avoid accidents.

Miss Smith

GASAFETY members vow always to drive in a safe, sane manner. Further, they've all agreed not to date any boy who is a notoriously wild driver, not even if he's a football hero with a sleek convertible. And they loyally stick to their pledge.

Blackballed are careless characters like "Road Hog Harry" and "Lover Boy Larry," dates who turn a corner on two wheels, go over hills in the center lane, or drive with one arm around a girl.

Girl-drivers who take unnecessary chances are labeled by GASAFETY too. These include "Anxious Annie," who guns the motor at a traffic signal and then shoots into the intersection the second the light turns. Another is "Nervous Natalie," who, while driving punctuates every word with hand-waving gestures.

But GASAFETY'S main target is the "hotrod men in their lives." By refusing to date bad drivers, explained one member, they no longer risk ending up in the emergency ward of a hospital.

Leave it to the gals to find one sure way of putting the reins on careless young motorists.
