TIME AND PLACE

Old Joe got to his feet and went to bowing and scraping and drinking his ovation all in. As Churchill would say, the old Kicker's "Finest Hour" had dawned.

I will always remember old Joe's speech. The kind of speeches we would not hear these days. No fooling around, right to the point. He started off by saying he had not wanted to run but had to do something to save the country from a gang of crooks. He said, "You know folks, this here town of Smithers is being run by six crooks. There's Mason Adams of the drugstore, there's Ed Orchard of the Bulkley Hotel, there's McGill the lawyer, there's Billy Henry who sells Fords, and Ray Williams of the Real Estate and Tom Carr of the lumberyard. These were the six crooks, who are trying to run the town. Me I call them the "Dirty Six." We have to run the Dirty Six out of town or lose everything we got. They'll be stealing me mine next."

I was sitting down in a front seat laughing my sides out. Old Joe spotted me, stopped in his tracks and pointed at me and said, "I see Wiggs O'Neill sitting down there and laughing at me. Folks, I forgot to tell you that Wiggs tried to get in with this Dirty Six outfit, but they were a scared of him being too foxy, and would probably cheat them out of all the loot, so they wouldn't let him in."

Joe the Kicker, if I remember got about twenty-five votes in the riding and only about eight in Smithers, where he got all his campaign money.

A few days after the election the Old Kicker marched into Sandy's Barber Shop and said, "Sandy something is rotten in this here Denmark. A hundred and eighty folks signed my papers and paid my campaign funds and I only got eight votes in town, how come?"

Sandy said, "I can't figure that out Joe, I surely thought you were going to win. It must have been that dam dirty six outfit."

Not too long afterwards Old Joe was highly elated, he came into the barber shop and told the bunch he was leaving town for a while. Alex Manson had got him a job watchman down the coast somewhere. He said he was going to take it on for the winter anyway and save a bit of money, so he could do a bit more work in his tunnel.

He believed he had only a little further to go when he would hit her big. He was a real prospector, always going to hit the jackpot.

I don't know whatever became of Joe Kelly the Kicker. His old mine is still over at the foot of the mountain and the last bit of attention I ever saw over there was a few years back when everyone was excited about uranium. We formed a club and bought a gieger counter, the first place our boys headed for was Kelly the Kicker's mine, but the darned old thing didn't seem to have any uranium in it.

None can see into the future, but some day we may see a producing mine right under our noses in the Kicker's old Tunnel. Who knows?

Convention date set

VANCOUVER (CP)—B.C. Federation of Labor will hold its sixth annual convention here October 23-24. The session will be followed by the founding convention of the B.C. section of the New Democratic Party October 27-29. Delegates from throughout the province will attend the federal convention. Major items on the agenda will include Bills 42 and 43, controversial labor legislation passed at the last two sessions of the B.C. Legislature.
