Opening lead: Ten of ♦

One of the most important guides to the successful play of the cards is this principle: "Make the opposition play before you use your important cards." It is a distinct advantage to play fourth hand to any trick and the one who plays first is under a handicap. South's failure to grasp this principle involved him in a loss which ran into several figures.

Today's bidding was more or less routine and the ten of diamonds was opened against the six spade contract. Dummy's jack of diamonds held the first trick and the queen of spades was cashed followed by a low spade to the ace. When West showed out, declarer discontinued the suit. He cashed the ace of hearts and then led over to the queen, which was ruffed by East.

Declarer was obliged to lose another heart trick and the contract went on the rocks. He had neglected to employ the technique of getting the opposition to play first before using his important card. He should not have permitted the queen of hearts to be trumped.

This could have been accomplished in a very simple manner. East is the one open to the suspicion of being short in hearts. The first heart should be won with the queen, not the ace. Then a low heart is led from dummy.

What is East to do? If he ruffs, declarer gives up a little heart and his work is over. If East discards, as he should, declarer will win with the king and enter dummy to lead another heart, again forcing the enemy to play before he uses an important heart.

Let us assume that East ducks again. The ace of hearts wins and the six of hearts is ruffed with dummy's five of trumps. East can overruff but that is the only trick the defence can take.

Prince Charles soccer fan

RUGBY, England (AP)—The citizens of Rugby—where rugby football was invented — presented the Queen Mother an oval-shaped football Wednesday for Prince Charles.

"Thank you very much," replied the Queen Mother, "but I'm sorry to say my grandson is rather fond of soccer."

As faces fell, she added:

"I feel, however, that this gift may convert him."

Everybody went away happy from the ceremonies, at which the Queen Mother opened the new town hall.
