Opening lead: Jack of ♣

The proper handling of a great many card combinations does not receive the full treatment in bridge texts. They tend to present the subject in an abstract manner, whereas at the table, the correct play is usually determined by the issue at stake in the entire hand. Today we have a case in point.

East's decision to open the bidding in the third seat with 12 points is quite acceptable but his choice of calls was not the best. Since his purpose in bidding is to compete for the part score, he should select that suit which offers the best prospect for buying the hand. There is the further consideration that, if his side winds up defending, it appears desirable to suggest a spade lead.

South's immediate cue bid, which is forcing to game, is rather drastic on a hand containing five losers. Unless North is able to take voluntary action at some stage of the auction there can be no reasonable assurance of game. North dutifully kept the bidding open for his partner until the four heart contract was reached.

West led the jack of clubs, dummy played low, and East played the king. Declarer quickly noted that he had two spade losers and one each in diamonds and clubs. The only prospect for obtaining a discard lay in the club suit for East's play at the first trick had established South's queen of clubs. Unfortunately there was no side entry to reach dummy to cash the ace and declarer obviously could not afford to overtake the queen.

Presently a solution presented itself. West's lead of the jack of clubs suggested that he had the ten as well. If this were the case, dummy had a tenace position over the lower honor and declarer would be able to take a finesse against it provided that he unblocked his queen. South, therefore, threw the queen of clubs under the king on the first trick.

East shifted to the jack of spades which was taken by the ace in the closed hand. Trumps were drawn in three rounds, and now declarer led the five of clubs. West played low, the nine was put in from dummy, and when this held a spade was thrown on the ace of clubs. In all, declarer lost one trick in each side suit, making four hearts.
