Opening lead: King of ♣

Albert "Dingy" Weiss for many years has been the mighty mite of the bridge world. Our friendly rivalry has spanned a period of over a quarter century. Playing with Arthur Glatt, he has won nearly every laurel that tournament bridge has to offer.

It was, therefore, only fitting that this partnership should be invited to participate on my "Championship Bridge" show which is currently in its third year on video. Today's hand, taken from a practice match held before the program, reveals how effectively this pair operates at the table.

Glatt, seated West, opened the king of clubs against the four spade contract. Weiss, in the East position, signalled encouragingly with the nine, and declarer followed with the deuce. Prospects in the suit did not appear encouraging to Glatt because, when his partner failed to overtake the king in an effort to try for a third round ruff, it seemed nearly certain that he also held the missing five and that South was now void.

Since the diamond suit loomed menacingly as a source of discards, West shifted to the king of hearts as the only hope for additional tricks. The ace was played from dummy as East signalled with the eight. Declarer took the spade finesse and Glatt was in with the king. He continued with another heart and now came the key play of the hand. Although the jack of hearts was high, Weiss overtook with the queen and led a third round of hearts. Declarer of course was obliged to follow suit, and West ruffed in with the eight of spades to take the setting trick.

Glatt's heart shift at trick two was noteworthy and Weiss did not fail to draw the key inference. When his partner abandoned clubs, he concluded that there were no more tricks available to the defense from that source. Since a second trick in hearts was required to defeat the contract, it was necessary to play West for a doubleton and hope that he had a trump that could top the dummy's seven of spades.

Armchair strategists may be quick to point out that, had declarer ducked West's heart shift, he could have averted the ruff, but even in the bridge stratosphere one does not always encounter perfect technique.
