Opening lead: King of ♣

A colorful and quite volatile personality entered the tournament bridge scene a couple of seasons ago in the form of Phil Feldesman. Feldesman, a product of the near east, who currently hails from New York, proceeded to win both the Men's Pairs and Life Master's Pairs at the Summer Nationals last August. As if to convince any doubters, he repeated the triumph in the Master's Pairs in Houston last December.

Today we have a hand on which Mr. Feldesman employed a bit of psychology to talk his opponents out of the winning line of defense.

North doubled West's opening bid of one club and Feldesman, seated South, responded with one heart. He deliberately suppressed his five card diamond suit, for the accepted practice is to show a biddable major when partner makes a take-out double. West rebid his clubs and, had North chosen to double, a 500 point sting would have been inflicted. North elected to raise his partner, however, and South proceeded directly to game since his hand was worth 10 points, whereas his original response might have been based on little or nothing.

West opened the king of clubs, and Feldesman, with apparent carelessness, played the queen from dummy. It appeared quite likely to him that West held a six card suit in which case East would be able to ruff the third round of clubs. Since any of the missing small trumps would force out declarer's ace of hearts, both the king and queen of hearts would become established to set the contract. He, therefore, tried to make it easy for East to take a discard.

West continued with the ace and jack of clubs, and East did not rise to the occasion. He threw off a small diamond and declarer ruffed. By entering dummy twice to take two heart finesses Feldesman was able to hold his trump losses to one trick.
