WEEKLY SERMON

"SIDE-TRACKED"

By REV. C. A. MYHRE
Pentecostal Tabernacle

Of all people to let their life get side-tracked, one would expect the judge to be the last. It didn't work that way however; in the case of Samson. In spite of a very good start, he got off on the wrong track.

It was not the big overpowering enemies that sent him the wrong way. A roaring lion didn't frighten him. A thousand Philistines tried to hold him only to be overcome and left "heaps upon heaps." Single-handed he wrecked the portals of the prison city, Goza, and carried the doors away with him. Yet, as we read the account of Samson's life, we become mysteriously haunted by another picture, "What could have been."

His missing the best came out in just the same way as twentieth century potentials sometimes fail. He tried to yield his life to God on the installment plan, "a little now and the rest later." In some business contracts this may be done to advantage. Not so in dealing with God. When He invites, "Son, give Me thine heart," he expects an all-out dedication.

The 100 per cent surrender to God, is after all the only life that pays. Samson found, as many others have since learned, that "the way of the transgressor is hard." Our Saviour made it most plain when He said, "My yoke is easy, and my burden is light." It was of a life so dedicated to God that David sang, "The Lord is My Shepherd."

We are often asked, "How can one live a Christian life in our day?" The better question is "How can one really live without Christ?" Apart from His pardon, His friendship and His assurance of the future, our present life becomes frustrating. Beyond that, it's too frightening for contemplation.

Why not make a full surrender to God as the songwriter did? "Just as I am, without one plea, but that Thy blood was shed for me, fightings and fears within, without, O Lamb of God, I come, I come!"

True, Samson did make a comeback. At best however, his final conquest was only a monument to his wasted years. How much better to have the risen Lord say of you, "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, and my new name." Rev. 3:12.

BPWC's week October 14 to 20

"More Power with Womanpower" is the theme chosen for the business women's week in Canada, October 14 to 20, which will be marked by the Canadian Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, stated Miss Elsie MacGill, president.

She said a letter had been received by the Federation and its 169 clubs from Prime Minister John Diefenbaker, congratulating the clubs which are "contributing much to the greater participation of women in management and planning in every sphere of professional activity."

"Canadian women are to be congratulated on their determination to raise ever higher their standards of achievement in public life and in the service of society," the prime minister said.

Most BPW Clubs give bursaries, scholarship or award to local women and girls to advance their education, and they also support UNICEF and UNESCO Gift Coupon Projects. Annually the Federation awards a United Nations Fellowship of $500 to a club member to observe and report on the regular sitting of the United Nations Status of Women Commission or Human Rights Commission. This year the Federation will also provide some $3,500 to maintain seven students at the Training Centre for Women at Ramallah in Jordan. The Ramallah Training Centre is a UNWRA project endorsed by the International Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, of which the Canadian Federation is an active member.

Credit unions to hold dinner

Officers of Prince Rupert's two credit unions and their wives will celebrate Credit Union Day with a dinner at La Gondola Cafe at 7 p.m. Saturday.

Following the dinner, a dance will be held in the wardroom of HMCS Chatham. Credit Union Day actually falls on October 18.

This day is now observed annually by 16 million credit union members throughout the world. There are now 28,000 credit unions operating in more than 60 countries, and each of these is a working example of the credit union day theme, "People helping people to economic progress."

Five thousand members in the two local credit unions, Kaien Consumers and the Prince Rupert Fishermen's, are affiliated with the international organization of credit unions, the Credit Union National Association (CUNA), the sponsors of the annual credit union day celebrations.

Junior high courses prove most popular

There are more than 20 students enrolled in each class of junior high mathematics and junior high English which began Tuesday at Booth Memorial Secondary High school, it was reported today by G. T. Caldwell, director of adult education.

Some interest was shown in senior courses in English and mathematics, Mr. Caldwell said, but more students are needed before these courses can be established.

On Tuesday night, typing and bookkeeping were the most popular classes. However, in many other courses, the number of students has dropped and may have to be discontinued if more interest is not shown.

The registration date is being extended so that more students may enrol for the following courses.: on Tuesday night, auto-mechanics, typing, conversational French, some aspects of physchology, Russian, senior high mathematics and English, woodwork and art and junior high mathematics; on Thursday, dressmaking, shorthand, bookkeeping, typing, junior high English, color photography for beginners, drafting, Rev. Dr. R. W. K. Elliott's lectures on "The Progress of Man" and William Hankinson's lectures on "Promotional Communications".

It is hoped that more people will turn out to the English for new Canadians, Mr. Caldwell said. This is a crucial year for adult education in the city, he stated. These classes provide a very important service to local adults who are short of vocational or academic training.

"The mathematics and English lessons, typing, bookkeeping, shorthand, auto mechanics, drafting, woodwork and dressmaking will help make people better qualified to get better employment," he said. "Other courses, like the lectures in philosophy and comunications, and Richard Miller's course in "Some Aspects of Psychology" give us more confidence and knowledge in ourselves and greater knowledge of the world around us".

For further inquiries or registration, anyone interested is asked to call Mr. Caldwell at 5031 or evenings at 3401.
