The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	1 NT	2 ♦
4 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Jack of ♦

When a defender possesses knowledge which may not be available to his partner, it is distinctly remiss on his part if he fails to lend a helping hand. West stood passively by in today's hand and allowed East to make a play which presented the declarer with an unmakable game.

South had eight winners in his own hand and, when North was able to keep the bidding open, it appeared not unreasonable to expect him somehow to produce a couple of tricks, and South accordingly contracted for a game in spades.

West opened the jack of diamonds, and East overtook with the queen in order to continue the suit for three rounds. On the last diamond, West was called on to make a discard, and he selected the six of clubs as his play.

It was not clear to East at this point whether he should shift to a heart in order to make a play for his partner in that suit, or else continue with another round of diamonds in an effort to promote West's trump holding. After much mental turmoil, East finally chose to play a fourth diamond. South was able to discard the ten of hearts from his hand as he trumped the trick with North's nine of spades.

West took his partner to task for not having shifted to a heart, and perhaps he was right. However, West could have eliminated all problems for East by taking charge himself. When the third diamond trick is cashed, West should seize the initiative by ruffing in with the three of spades. It will then become routine for him to get out with a club and wait for the setting trick with the king of hearts.

Sweden's merchant navy reached a total of 4,100,000 tons in 1962.

ANIMAL TROUBLE

Ontario hydro trouble-shooters in 1962 reported a beaver dropped a tree over power lines, while a moose won a fight with a hydro pole.

FORT NELSON (—This town of 3,200 is without a doctor.

Dr. Paul de Montigny, the community's only doctor, left Sunday, and the chamber of commerce has been unsucessful in its search for a replacement.

The town has a hospital staffed by six trained nurses, but the closest doctor is at Fort St. John, 250 miles away.

John Ewing, president of the chamber of commerce, said two government doctors passing through Monday on their way to Aklavik were able to treat a woman who was hemorrhaging.

Both doctors were kept busy all day. Since they were not licensed to practise in British Columbia they had to telephone Dawson Creek for permission to treat patients.

No emergency treatment has been required today, but Mr. Ewing said he is not sure what will happen when it is needed.
