Blackwood on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Mr. Abel was guilty of "half-way" thinking in today's deal. He became so fascinated with the problem of how to play the club suit that he forgot another matter which has considerable importance at a suit contract—the matter of pulling the opponents' trumps.

Miss Brash won the first three tricks with top diamonds, then shifted to the deuce of hearts. Mr. Abel won trick four with the ace of hearts and studies the layout.

In order to ruff a heart on the board, he would have to give up a trick in the suit. That was no good as the enemy had already won their book. Somehow, then, he had to get rid of two hearts on dummy's club suit.

He thought of picking up the opposing trumps and playing the clubs to break 3-3. He also thought of finessing the ten on the second club lead in case Miss Brash had started with four to the jack.

Mr. Abel

This seemed rather unlikely as Miss Brash had shown five diamonds and, from her lead of the deuce of hearts, appeared to have four cards in that suit. Therefore, if either opponent held four clubs it was probably Mr. Dale.

Mr. Abel's final decision was to cash the king and ace of clubs, lead a third club and ruff it high in his hand. The suit broke 3-3 and now the problem was to get to the board after trumps were out to cash the two good clubs. This was more than a problem. It was an impossibility.

When he cashed the second round of trumps, Miss Brash showed out. It was then clear that after winning the third round of trumps in dummy, no discards would be available on clubs because Mr. Dale would have a trump left. So the contract was hopeless.

"Did you think you were playing a no trump contract?" asked Mr. Champion nastily. "Even Muzzy picks up the trumps before trying to run a five-card side suit."

What Mr. Champion was trying to say in his lovable way was that Mr. Abel should have taken two rounds of trumps before he touched the clubs.

This would have forced him into picking up all the outstanding trumps—the winning line of play.
