Opening lead: Jack of ♦

A spirited bidding contest took place on the hand presented today from an international match between France and an American team of which I was a member. A significant swing was gained by the United States forces despite the fact that both North-South pairs reached for the same overly ambitious contract.

The bidding sequence depicted in the diagram occurred at the table where my partner and I held the East and West cards. I passed as the dealer and Lee Hazen opened the East hand in third position with one diamond. South chose to overcall with four spades, tho it appears that he might have entertained stronger ambitions in the event that partner could be found with a couple of key cards. In light of the favorable vulnerability, it would have been pusillanimous on my part to sell out so cheaply, and yet I did not wish to guess which suit to bid at this point. I therefore made a somewhat unusual response of four no trump which could hardly be taken as Blackwood in light of my original pass. The bid was intended to open the door for a contract either in one of the other suits if partner had a secondary holding, or in diamonds if his suit was rebiddable.

When the bidding reverted to Hazen, he dutifully bid five clubs, and then South carried on to five spades. On the principle that when in doubt there is more to gain than lose in bidding again, I persisted to six clubs which North greeted with a double. South was apparently remorseful over his early failure to fully investigate offensive possibilities and, in the hope that North's action was based in part on strength in hearts, he overruled the double and bid six spades, which I doubled.

I led the jack of diamonds and declarer could not avoid losing one trick in each side suit for a 500 point deficit. At the other table, our teammates also arrived at six spades, but on an aggressive sequence of bids where the opposition failed to compete. As a result, there was no double and declarer's two trick set totalled only a 200 point loss. Our forces therefore gained 300 points on the deal.
