DOLLY VARDEN

first year after commencement of milling," adds Dr. Buckland.

"But this is no criterion of what later profits may be."

The outlook for silver is sound.

Ever since the U.S. removed the artificial price ceiling of 90½ cents per ounce to domestic industrial users, the price has risen steadily.

As well as being a "glamor" metal, silver is now becoming more and more an industrial metal and is being put to ever-increasing use in the photographic and electronic fields.

Widespread increase in the use of coin - operated vending machines and parking meters is a specific example of continued demand for the metal in coinage.

World demand is running ahead of supply by a considerable margin.

The mining camp at Alice Arm can look forward to some productive years once again. Last year's economic studies showed an excellent profit available, and with this year's 25 per cent increase in the price of silver, a large profit is assured.

Thus, the future looks bright for Dolly Varden and the "serious mining" has not even started yet.

Opening lead: Deuce of ♣

One of the brightest stars to light on the tournament scene in recent seasons is Eddie Kantar, the personable young teacher from Los Angeles, a versatile chap who excels in a number of areas, not the least of which is table tennis, at which in order to properly handicap the contest he sits in a rocker at his end of the table and usually outscores all comers. Kantar's team, for the second successive year, annexed the Spingold trophy, emblematic of the Masters Team championship. In a stirring three way head heat it required the mathematician's slide rule to determine the winner and the Kantar group came thru again the my team enjoyed the consolation of having beaten them in the round robin playoff.

An illustration of his virtuosity comes thru in the above hand from an early round of the tournament where he fulfilled a four heart contract which eluded the grasp of most other declarers. While it is true that an initial attack of the ace and another diamond would have been very productive for the defense one can hardly view such a maneuver as the normal procedure, and I for one can find no fault with West's opening lead of a small club. The six was played from dummy, East put in the jack and Kantar won the trick with the king.

The ace and king of trumps were cashed and, when West's jack dropped on the second round, North's nine of hearts became established as an entry. South decided to work on the dummy's spade suit and, after playing the two top honors, he ruffed a third round with the ten of hearts, as West discarded a diamond.

The North hand was reëntered as the carefully preserved deuce of hearts was led over to the nine, and a fourth spade was played. When East followed with the queen, declarer permitted him to hold the trick, discarding a club from the South hand.

The shrewdness of South's play may be noted when we consider East's plight at this point. He was looking at a dummy that contained an established long card in spades with secondary controls in both minor suits as potential entry cards. East tried to put off the evil moment by leading the ace of clubs, but Kantar allowed his adversary to win this trick also, as he threw a diamond. East switched to a diamond and West took the third trick for the defenders with the ace of that suit, but the North hand was now established to claim the balance.

Declarer's discard on the fourth round of spades is the key play. If he ruffs, it will be with his last trump and now, when a diamond is led toward the king in dummy, West will come up with the ace and play another club, permitting his partner to take four tricks in that suit.
