Arctic air grips most of Canada

By The Canadian Press

Most of Canada was shivering in cold arctic air today.

Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, northern Ontario, parts of southern Ontario, Quebec, northern New Brunswick and Newfoundland all recorded sub-zero temperatures Tuesday night. Only the southern Maritimes and the West Coast had mild weather.

Records for the day were set in several Ontario cities for low maximum temperature readings Tuesday. Windsor's maximum was nine above, beating the mark of 17 above set in 1957.

London had a maximum reading of five. The previous low was one below in 1941.

Malton Airport northwest of Toronto had a maximum Tuesday of nine above. The previous record was 12 above set in 1946.

Few storms were reported across the country. Light snow was falling north of Calgary and there were a few snowflurries in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

Lowest temperature reading Tuesday night was 43 below zero at Fort Smith in the Northwest Territories. British Columbia's coast recorded temperature in the low 30s and most of the Maritimes had readings in the 20s.
