GOREN ON BRIDGE

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
1 ◇	Double	1 ♡	2 ♠
Pass	3 ♠	Pass	4 ♠
Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Ace of ◇

West put on a virtuoso performance in today's hand. With fine coöperative defense he and his partner were able to develop their mediocre equipment into a fighting force of sufficient strength to down the game contract.

South's jump to two spades may seem irregular in some quarters but actually it is sound procedure in the circumstances. In responding to a take-out double a four card major should be preferred to a five card minor suit. Then too South, having 10 high card points, in addition to two distributional points, was fully justified in making a jump response.

West gave careful thought to the opening lead and ultimately decided in favor of the ace of diamonds. He reasoned that, when his partner bid one heart over North's double, it might well be because he was short in diamonds. In addition to this, the situation appeared to be rather desperate, and West feared that unless some ruffing tricks were available defensive prospects were probably hopeless.

The ace of diamonds held the first trick and West continued with the queen: East of course ruffed away North's king. Since clubs was the only side suit in which West could have another quick entry, East shifted to the eight of that suit and his partner was in again with the ace.

The defense had their book in but, with declarer out of diamonds himself now, the only chance for another trick seemed to lie in the trump suit. If East had some spade holding that could promote West's queen of spades, then another diamond lead would develop matters constructively by means of the "upper cut."

So reasoning, West exited with a small diamond even though his jack was the master card in the suit. He wanted to make certain that his partner ruffed in. This would have been no time for East to trump with the seven of spades. However, he was attuned to the situation and he put his jack of spades to good use. Declarer overruffed with the ace, but there was no way to prevent West from winning the setting trick with his queen of spades.
