SAFE CONDUCT

In guaranteeing safe conduct to Count Von Bernstorff and the three hundred German consuls who are to be sent out of the United States, Britain is playing the game as she knows it and has always played it. No matter how far Germany may sink in her methods of waging war, Britain plays the game. There is nothing to Britain's credit in doing this; she would be false to her history and false to posterity if she did not. For Britain to depart from the usages of war between nations would be a much greater injury to Britain than it would be to Germany. Britain cannot afford to stoop to a low level any more than a reputable citizen can afford to break into his neighbor's house. Germany has broken all the laws of nations and the common law of humanity, but she has not fallen from any national height: she has merely shown the world that she has been living for generations in the depths.

There will be many who will suggest that Bernstorff and his fellow conspirators should be allowed to pick their way across the Atlantic as best they can, and, if a German submarine sends them to the bottom, so much the better. It is almost impossible to remain patient and maintain a humane state of mind when one remembers what has been perpetrated by these gentlemen in the United States, or at least at their instigation. One Canadian yesterday suggested that the three hundred consuls should be brought across one at a time, so that three hundred trips may be safely made by British vessels. This is rather ingenious and would probably not be breaking the letter of international law.

GERMAN IDEAS

A letter from a Parisian correspondent, containing an extract from the Berlin Lokal Anzieger, published in the New York Tribune, shows what Germany wanted when she asked for peace. The article states clearly that Germany went to war a year too soon and that, the moment peace is declared, she must at once start a reorganization upon a broader and firmer basis that she may be ready for the next war. In spite of Germany's diplomatic truths about freedom and the peace of the world, it is very evident that she has no intention of maintaining any peace until she is either conquered or conquers the world. Germany's idea of a lasting peace is the lulling to sleep of all other nations, while the Prussian war lord makes ready to murder the lot.

America and the other neutrals must now realize fully just what must be accomplished in order to bring about a lasting peace. Prussianism and all its military organization must be smashed so that it cannot be put together again; the German people must be freed from the yoke which bound them for the last forty years, and the only means by which this can be accomplished is by the utter rout of the Hohenzollerns and all they represent. So long as a Kaiser reigns in Germany, just so long will there be danger of a recurrence of the horrors of the past two and half years.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

President Wilson has adopted a policy of watchful waiting. It is up to Germany to make the first move. It may be that the submarine threats are but another evidence of Prussian bluff and bluster.

• • •

Austria meantime maintains her relationship with the United States. It is very certain that the Vienna diplomats today sincerely wish that they were on the same terms with the Entente Powers.

• • •

Germany still has no regrets that she raided Belgium; she is not penitent over the sinking of the Lusitania and she has no notion of giving up her barbarous methods, yet she tried to make the whole world believe that she was ready for peace.

• • •

Instead of helping to bring the war to an end, the German submarine threats only go to show how determinedly the Allies must fight to conquer the brute which has gone mad in Europe.

• • •

Sam Hughes is at his old tricks. Nobody knows anything but Sam. He says General Alderson did not know the first thing about rifles. Even if he did not, the Canadian boys showed that they did, when they threw away their Ross rifles and grabbed Lee-Enfields from dead hands.

• • •

The Germans say they want to remain friendly and neighborly towards Belgium, and then they sink a Belgian relief ship laden with wheat.

Who's to Blame for the High Cost of Food?

It may be the farmer, it may be the middleman, it may be the weather—but never mind—you have Shredded Wheat at the same old price, the same high quality, the one perfect, complete food, supplying more real nutriment than meat, or eggs, or vegetables, costing much less and more easily digested. Cut out the high-price foods. Eat Shredded Wheat for breakfast with milk or cream. Eat it for dinner with stewed fruits and green vegetables. A deliciously nourishing meal for only a few cents. Made in Canada.
