WHOLESALE EXECUTION TURKISH PLOTTERS

HALIBUT BOAT DESTROYED BY FIRE OFF CAPE OMANEY BUT CREW ESCAPE

Halibut Schooner Was Burned at Sea and Her Crew Are at Ketchikan

Einer Rolie, Hans Birkland and L. Bogen were in open dory two days and two nights wet and almost without clothes

KETCHIKAN, July 15.—The hardship and danger of the life of a fisherman was again well illustrated this week in the account of the burning at sea of the halibut schooner Gladys, the crew of which have arrived here. Rowing in an open dory for two days and two nights without shoes, coats or hats, Einar Rolie, Hans Birkland and L. Bogen were picked up Saturday off Cape Omaney and arrived here this week.

Birkland was the master and Rolie and Bogen were the crew of the halibut schooner Gladys which was destroyed by fire last Thursday while 35 miles southeast of Carnation Island, in the Pacific Ocean.

While engaged in fishing for halibut shortly after noon on Thursday, the Gladys caught fire in some as yet undetermind manner.

Unable to check the flames or save any of their personal effects the men threw the dory overboard. The dory drifted away from the flaming Gladys and the men had to swim for it to save their lives.

They then commenced their battle with wind and wave, rowing steadily all day and all night until late Saturday afternoon when picked up in an exhausted condition off Cape Omaney by a troller who brought them to Ketchikan.

None of them were able to save any of their effects and upon arrival here had to be outfitted with clothing by their friends.

Rolie is a local resident and is a brother of J. H. Rolie, who owned the Gladys. None of the mariners were married.

The Gladys was 44 feet long and was valued at $9,000. The boat was only two years old and was partly covered by insurance.

The vessel made the passage from Osaka to Prince Rupert in fourteen days. On the last week of the voyage she experienced almost constant fog.

The vessel is of 2,516 tons register and carries a crew of 29 men, all of whom are Norwegians except one, who is a German. She was built about a year ago in Germany and is a beautifully fitted out freighter. Her owners are the Hjalmar Roed Co., of Tonsberg, Norway, and the local agents are B. L. Johnson-Walton Co.

It was the first visit of Capt. Berbom and his officers to Prince Rupert and they were pleased with the harbor and its easy entrance.
