IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of our dear husband and father, Ronald Gasiunas, we lost Oct. 22, 1951.
How little we knew when we went to bed that night
The sorrow day would bring,
For the call was sudden and the shock severe
To part with one we love so dear.
Although in body you are far
In spirit you are near.
—Your wife Kay, and son Ronnie. (1tp)

HUTCHISON WRITES

Army Revolt Threat Gave Conscription

A threatened Canadian Army revolt—either real or imagined—climaxed the famous Conscription Crisis of 1944.

Writing in Maclean's magazine, Bruce Hutchinson reveals that "Mackenzie King either saw or thought he saw, or pretended to see the Canadian Army on the verge of seizing political power through a sit-down strike or an open uprising."

The article, titled "Mackenzie King and the 'Revolt' of the army" goes on to say that "much of the evidence suggests he invented this threat by self-hypnosis to save his government, his nation and himself. The evidence he used to justify his abrupt about-face and induce a reluctant cabinet to continue his support is incontrovertible."

The Crisis involved the resignation of the Hon. Layton Ralston as Minister of Defense. King supplanted him with General A. G. L. McNaughton, former Commander-in-Chief of Canadian forces overseas. Ralston had resigned because he believed the army in the field could be reinforced properly only by a policy of conscription. King believed McNaughton could get the necessary troops by voluntary methods.

McNaughton failed and King, who had stood firm on his "no conscription" policy faced a rising tide of public and parliamentary opinion that threatened to engulf his government.

Then, Hutchison reports, at noon on Nov. 22, 1944, McNaughton phoned King and "in a voice hoarse with shock exclaimed: 'I have terrible news for you, Chief! What I must tell you will come as a body blow.'

"The military commanders, said McNaughton, 'no longer would accept the responsibility of directing the army unless conscription were applied immediately."

The Maclean's article makes it clear that the above account was King's own version of what happened to make him change his mind about conscription for overseas service in Canada.

Hutchison says that King called in Louis St. Laurent, then a member of the cabinet, and "the key to everything." He told him the story.

"Whether St. Laurent believed King only St. Laurent knows" Hutchison writes. "Whether King believed himself . . . only King knew."

"Nevertheless the need for conscription had been proved beyond a doubt. McNaughton could not get volunteers and the Prime Minister expected national anarchy."

"He consented to immediate conscription. In that consent he saved the Government, the Liberal party and perhaps the nation."

BLACKWOOD on Bridge

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

More "Scientific" Player Might Have Lost This Hand

Usually it is unwise to raise Miss Brash's overcalls on doubtful values. But there are always exceptions. Mr. Muzzy did it in today's hand and Miss Brash then put in an overbid of her own—four hearts.

A more "scientific" player might have gone down a couple of tricks. At the start of the play, after Mr. Meek had opened the king of diamonds, it appeared that there could be one loser in spades, one in hearts, one in clubs and two in diamonds.

That's the way Mr. Meek would have looked at it. Miss Brash, of course, was completely confident about her contract even before she played to the first trick.

She won with the ace of diamonds and paused to plan her play. It was possible to get away with no heart losers if the king of hearts were singleton or of Mr. Champion had the king-eight and Mr. Meek the lone jack. In this latter case, it would be necessary to enter dummy and lead the queen of hearts. If Mr. Champion covered, the ace would be played and Mr. Meek's jack would fall. If Mr. Champion failed to cover, the queen would win and the ace would then pick up the king.

The bidding:

1 D	1 H	Pass	2 H
Pass	4 H	All pass

The only quick entry to the dummy was in the spade suit. If a spade were led, the queen would have to be finessed or a spade winner for the enemy would be set up.

Miss Brash didn't think long about these intricate possibilities. In her usual slap-dash style, she banged down the ace of hearts, causing Mr. Champion to grit his teeth in disgust. Next, she led the six of hearts to dummy's queen, carefully preserving the four as a means of entering dummy later.

Back came a diamond and Mr. Champion won with the jack. He cashed the king of clubs, then led the ace, which Miss Brash ruffed with the seven of hearts. The four of hearts to dummy's five and another diamond lead fixed Mr. Champion for good. He won with the queen of diamonds and that set up Miss Brash's 10 on which she later discarded the queen of spades from the board, making 10 tricks a certainty.

Sterling Areas Seek Conversion

LONDON (CP)—Commonwealth prime ministers may consider the suggestion for partial convertibility of sterling into dollars at their conference here next month, reliable sources said today.

It is believed to be one of many suggestions put forward to solve the sterling areas' recurring dollar deficiency problems.

BRIGHTON, England (CP) — While repairing a roof, John Baker found a German iron cross pinned to the Swastika "Wings once worn by a German Luftwaffe Pilot. During the war a German bomber crashed near the spot.

LONDON (CP) — Hotel managers here reported pilferings on the increase. Worst offenders were said to be visitors from overseas who specialize in small articles and explain if caught, "just a nice little reminder of the visit."
