FINAL CHARGE LIQUOR CASES

Test of Legality of Method of Export Shipment is Being Made Today

The fourth and last charge to be proceeded with under the Government Liquor Act against the Consolidated Exporters Corporation, Ltd. which is going on today it was agreed by counsel yesterday afternoon, when the case opened, would be taken as a test of the legality of method of export shipment in selling liquor directly over the counter of the warehouse to be removed from the province by the foreign purchaser. The charge is that of illegal sale in this manner to Andrew Ness of the American halibut schooner Kanaga.

The first and only witness heard yesterday afternoon was Andrew Grant, provincial constable attached to the Liquor Board, who was placed on the stand so that he might be permitted to return to Vancouver today.

Constable Grant's evidence was to the effect that on November 20 about 4 p.m. he and Constable Harrison went to the Consolidated warehouse and, on entering saw Mr. Pyle and another man at the counter, the former writing. The paper was immediately removed and witness caught the words "You get pinched." The man Ness ordered liquor and Mr. Pyle took a daily sales slip and filled it up. Pyle asked the name of the man who replied "Anderson." Pyle said "I thought your name was Ness." The man replied: "Any damn name will do." The sale consisted of a bottle of brandy, a bottle of port wine and a bottle of liqueur. Ness, who was under the influence of liquor, as Pyle was making up the order, turned to witness and said "You wouldn't pinch me, chief?" Witness replied "You can never tell what I may do." Ness paid Pyle for the liquor and received some change, the transaction taking place over the counter. A transfer came and the officers accompanied the shipment to the Kanaga, Ness going down to the wharf in a taxi. The liquor was delivered aboard and the boat left immediately the liquor was put on board. The same day the officers received the company's record of liquor exported but did not find the Ness entry thereon. As a result Mr. Pyle was phoned and the latter stated that it was included under the Helgeland. Several days later Mr. Pyle furnished the detectives with a correct list showing the shipment in point. Various records were then entered as evidence.

Under Mr. Gonzales' cross-examination, Grant admitted that Pyle knew he was a detective at the time the transaction took place.

"Then why did you not arrest him right there and then?" asked Mr. Gonzales.

"My instructions were not to make arrests but to see that the liquor went out of the province," answered the witness.

Mr. Patmore then rose to make the position of the prosecution clear. The defendant might have been acting in good faith in this case, he said, but it was his (Mr. Patmore's opinion that the sale was not legal. He was bringing this case to test the legality of this method of exporting.

"If it is in the nature of a test case," repplied Mr. Gonzales, "then we are prepared to admit everything regarding the transaction. We are prepared to lay our cards on the table and argue the point now, once and for all."

Mr. Patmore then stated that he intended to argue, as a result of various inconsistencies, that the accused knew it was not bona fide export.

Mr. Gonzales reiterated he was prepared to argue that this could be done legally.

Mr. Patmore declared that he did not intend to argue the point of bad faith in this particular case but he wanted to have all the evidence presented in case there was an appeal.

The examination of witness then continued and about 4:30 adjournment was taken until this afternoon.

At the regular meeting of the police commission yesterday it was decided to insert in each of the local papers a summary of the rule of the road regulations as local drivers of cars seemed not to know them well. They will be asked to cut them out and paste them in a position where they may easily refer to them.
