BLACKWOOD on Bridge

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Mr. Dale Avoids Common Error in Making One-Bid

Mr. Dale did not make the rather common mistake of bidding one spade on his hand in today's deal. His spade suit is biddable, but the point is, his hand is not strong enough for two bids. Therefore he rightly decided to make his one bid count for as much as possible. He simply raised his partner's heart bid.

Suppose he had responded with one spade and Mr. Masters had rebid two hearts. A forward-going bid of three hearts on the North cards would have been an over-bid and likely to land the partnership in trouble. And yet if the two-heart bid were passed, Mr. Masters would never know that Mr. Dale held adequate trump support in that suit.

Mr. Abel led the king of diamonds, then shifted to a trump. Mr. Masters noted that he had to lose two diamonds and a club in top cards. At first glance, it appears that the contract depended on a successful finesse against the king of spades.

As you see, the spade finesse would lose. But Mr. Masters always defers a finesse until all other lines of play have been tested. He saw a way to make his bid if the distribution of the club suit was not too unfavorable.

He won the second trick on the board and led the deuce of clubs. Miss Brash properly played low and the queen won. A club was returned and Mr. Abel permitted to win the trick with the nine spot. He could make no better return than another trump which was taken by dummy's ten. A third club was led now and Mr. Masters ruffed out the ace.

He led a diamond and Mr. Abel took the king. The contract was assured at this point and Mr. Abel's return was immaterial. Actually, he led a diamond and although Mr. Master's jack was good, he ruffed with dummy's last trump and discarded his jack of spades on the king of clubs.

IKE PILED UP VOTE RECO[RD] IN TOP NATION-WIDE PO[LL]

WASHINGTON (AP)—Dwight D. Eisenhower drew popular votes Tuesday than any other presidential can[didate] in United States history in an election which also set a high for total votes cast.

The Republican president-elect received 31,875,451 at the latest count. The previous high was piled up by Fr[anklin] D. Roosevelt in 1936—27,751,597 when all returns were in his race with Alf M. Landon.

Tuesday's incomplete total vote cast for both Eisen[hower] and Democrat Adlai Stevenson added up to 57,544,367, pared with the previous record of 49,820,312 set in 1940 Roosevelt defeated Wendell L. Willkie.
