MORE EVIDENCE WHITEWASH CASE

Attempted Murder trial Took all Time of Assize Court This Morning and is Contining

Taking of evidence for the crown in the case of Rex vs. Peter Whitewash, charged with attempted murder of Provincial Police Constable J. A. Williams, continued all morning today at the Supreme Court Assizes.

Constable Williams was subjected to a vigorous cross-examination by defence counsel when court convened. Witness further justified the course he had taken in attempting accused's arrest by peaceful means without a warrant. There was no magistrate within sixty miles, he said, to issue a warrant. The Indian agent was only a magistrate insofar as the Indian Act was concerned.

Three armed men went to Whitewash's house—witness, Milo Fougner and Casper Caspersen. Witness traced his movements at the time in question and accounted for time spent thereon. "No, I want to sleep," accused had said in reply to demands to come forth. Witness was afraid, if they left him, that accused might escape from the house and cafry out the threat against Native Constable Joe Saunders. It was about 11:30 p.m. that Williams was shot. The shot had been preceded with loud vociferation by Whitewash in a tongue that was not understandable to witness. When it appeared that a peaceful arrest could not be effected, they set about barricading the doors. They would not take the chance of going into the house against the armed man. Williams postilvely denied having his pistol in his right hand and the flashlight in the left. Witness admitted he was not left handed. He had had his gun in his hand at no time. He could not account for the sudden change in accused's manner from one of friendliness to that of anger and excitement which had immediately preceded the firing of the shot.

Witness did not know that Joe Saunders and accused had been bosom friends. Accused had not been advised that his arrest was proposed. The end of it was that Whitewash was not arrested at that time, the constable being shot himself.

Under re-examination by Mr. Gonzales, Williams stated that it was not necessary to break down the fence or climb it to get to Whitewash's house.

Milo O. Fougner, who assisted Williams in the unsuccessful arrest attempt, also testified. He took Whitewash in charge the next day until the arrival of Constable Dryden of Ocean Falls. Under cross-examination, he denied there had been any show of arms on the part of himself or Williams. If he had said so at the preliminary trial, it might have been an error due to the excitement.

Jorgen Caspersen, garageman, also told of assisting Constable Williams, his evidence being of a corroborative nature.

Robert Moody, Indian gas boat engineer, told of seeing Whitewash go up the road from the cannery carrying a gun. It was out of season for game, stated witness in answer to His Lordship.

Joe Saunders, stalwart native policeman, told of being informed of the threat against him. He had not gone close to the house when they attempted to put Whitewash under arrest. He admitted having been a close friend of accused. He heard part of the conversation between the officer's party and accused. The latter said in Bella Coola tongue: "he would show them a boom" and the shot followed.

Robert Hood, aged and decrepit Indian, told of a conversation he had had with Whitewash the morning after the shooting. Whitewash sad said "If Williams died last night, I would shoot somebody else and myself after that." Accused had given up empty shells to him. Under cross-examination, Hood said that Whitewash obviously felt very badly about the incident.

MOOSE LODGE PLANS BIGGEST BALL ROOM

Extensive Alterations to Building Decided Upon at Meeting Last Night

The Moose Lodge, at its meeting last night which was largely attended, decided to make extensive alterations to its building on Third Avenue. The main feature will be the conversion of the entire second story into a large dance hall, club quarters to be arranged for elsewhere in the building. There will be dressing rooms, etc., and the new hall when completed will be adequately adapted for the holding of conventions and meetings as well as balls and dances. The size of the floor will be nearly 50 by 100 feet.
