DRAT THAT DRAUGHT.

A clubman, after a sporty evening with plenty of liquid refreshments, arrived home about 1 a.m. Fumbling for his key, he found that he had forgotten it, so he tumbled into the hammock on the lawn and was soon fast asleep. He woke shortly after daybreak and saw his wife regarding him severely from the open window of their bedroom. "I shay," called the muddled one from the hammock, "shut that beastly window, will you? I'll catch my death of cold."—Boston Transcript.
