Death of Huge Sea Lion Causes Some Excitement on Board Halibut Boat Atli on Recent Trip to West

While a fisherman's life is apt to be rather monotonous, there are times when he has some diversion and the last trip of the Atli to the west coast of Queen Charlotte Islands was one of these. It seems that Skipper William Bussey and his crew of three men had their skates of gear out on the banks not far from North Island when a huge sea lion began to feed on the halibut, taking them from the hooks at a safe distance from the boat. He would come up with the halibut in his mouth, snap it in two and swallow one of the pieces, then diving rapidly would get the other piece before it got far below the surface and come up and eat it. Two halibut were taken from the long line in this way and the creature disappeared.

The work of hauling in the line and taking off the fish proceeded when the skipper suddenly shouted: "The sea lion's headed for the boat."

Bert Shepherd, one of the fishermen, hastened below for his shotgun, inserted the only shell at hand and, when the big beast rose up about five yards from the boat, fired and hit it in the neck, close to the head. Blood spurted from the wound and for fifteen minutes the creature flopped around, lashing the water until the whole sea was red with blood.

Once more the lion headed for the boat and the skipper shouted: "Here he is again and he may come on board." The reply of one of the men was: "If he does we'll take to the masts." As he got alongside he raised up for the last time, spouted blood and then with a final roar slowly gave up and sank beneath the surface, leaving only the bloody water to mark the spot.

Capt. W. P. Armour, head of the Armour Salvage Co., returned to port yesterday with the Salvage Princess from a ten day trip to Vancouver, having delivered to the southern port for resale two donkey engines which were recently purchased at the sale of effects of the defunct National Airplane Lumber Co. as well as the 75 h.p. Fairbanks-Morse full diesel engine from the wrecked halibut boat Livingstone II. The voyage was favored by good weather conditions and was speedy and uneventful, Capt. Armour reports. Making the round trip as guests of Capt. Armour were W. O. Fulton and son, Rupert, and Capt. J. R. Elfert. The Princess had a four-day stay in Vancouver, and made the trip back in 62 hours including a stop at Red Bluff for trout fishing. Also coming north were Capt. Pete Jensen, formerly of the local halibut boat Lysekil, and crew who are taking the vessel over for a pilchard packing charter to the Nootka Packing Co. on the West Coast of Vancouver Island, the charter starting July 4.

The service boat Qualis from Surf Point mine was in port yesterday afternoon, bringing the engineer in charge of the mine, R. E Legg, for a brief business visit to town. Returning home on the Qualis was Lyman H. Hinton B. C. L. S. who has been working at the Surf Point mine for the past several months.

According to reports reaching the office of the Dominion Fisheries here this morning the average catch of sockeye for gillnetters on the Naas River since the official opening of the season last night was two fish per boat with the high boat getting seven fish. While not large, this is not considered unfavorable for the opening day of fishing. No reports from the Skeena River had come in up to a late hour this morning.

Miss A. Hartin, teacher of the Indian school at Kincolith, was a passenger arriving on the Catala this afternoon from the Naas River. After a week's visit with friends here, she will proceed to her home in Vancouver to spend the summer vacation.

SEARCH CONTINUING FOR BODIES OF VICTIMS OF SKEENA DROWNING; POLICE REPORT HAS MORE DETAILS.

They were not seen again after the fatal plunge into the river.

Mr. Clarke had a narrow escape and was in a dazed condition after having been in the water some five minutes. He jumped clear of the cab as the car plunged off the ferry and believed that he saved himself by grasping the apron. Mrs. Clarke, who finally extricated him from the water after considerable difficulty, thinks that he actually was saved by grasping a ferry cable.

The ferry is a pontoon scow affair with aprons on either end by means of which cars and other vehicles may be driven aboard. It is propelled to and across the river by means of the river current and cables.

Constables Ed. Martin and Joe Devlin were sent from Prince Rupert last night with additional dragging equipment to supplement the search operations for the bodies which have been continuous since the tragedy occurred. About two miles down the river from the scene of the accident parts of the car were recovered.

Dragging operations will be concentrated immediately on a slough about a mile and a half below the scene of the tragedy into which it is thought possible the bodies may have been swept. Otherwise, the chance of recovering them is believed by those who know the river to be rather remote.

Miss L. Perry, teacher of the Indian school at Port Simpson, was a passenger aboard the Catala this afternoon going through to her home in Victoria where she will spend the summer vacation. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Perry, formerly of this city.
