ELDER STATESMAN WHO PLAYED LEADING PART IN WORLD WAR PASSES

tically in retirement, nursing the affliction which was gradually depriving him of his sight, and dividing his time between his "sanctuary" for wildfowl on his estate at Fallodon and long sojourns afield with his fishing tackle.

Many Misfortunes

Despite his position of power as a statesman, Viscount Grey's life was frequently described as one of negative successes and disastrous misfortunes. He sought to found a league of nations and was compelled, himself, to throw his country into the war against Germany. His first wife died in 1906, leaving him childless. His only brother was killed by a lion in Africa. During the war his only nephew was killed in action, leaving the viscount no heir to estates or title or to carry on the family line.

In June, 1922 he was again married very quietly, in the church at Winsford, close to Stonehenge on Salisbury Plain, to Lady Glenconner.

Grey was elected a Liberal member of the House of Commons at the age of 23. From then until 1916, when he became a peer, he served in the House continuously. In 1912, as a mark of distinguished service, King George made him a member of the Order of the Garter, the only commoner, it was said, ever to be thus honored.
