LEOPOLDVILLE (Reuters) — The first of 14 jet fighter planes needed to give United Nations, forces in The Congo air superiority arrived in Stanleyville today and were to continue to Ndjili airport near here later. A UN spokesman said the first

UN jets to arrive were two American-built F-86 Sabre jets of the Ethiopian Air Force. Four Ethiopian jets originally left Entebbe, Uganda, Monday for Stanleyville but two turned back after one developed engine trouble. Informed sources said the jets i probably will be stationed in Luluabourg, the Congolese Nation-breakaway Katanga province. The sources noted that the Sabre jets can stay in the air between three and four hours compared to the 45 minutes that the Katanga Army's Fouga Ma-1 gister jet can stay airborne.

IS EMBARRASSMENT Irish Gen. Sean McKeown, UN military commander in The Congo, has said the Katanga jet was a source of embarrassment to the UN during its eight-day, battle with Katanga forces that ended last week.

The UN had no jets in the NAMES IN THE NEWS fighting to end Katanga seces-
