Rich and Cream-Like

In a letter Mrs. D. points out the likeness to cream. Other patrons have in hundreds of letters. This cream quality is true because Pacific is extra rich. Mrs. D. writes: "Pacific Milk is equal to cream and very rch. It adds a splendid flavor to tea and coffee. we use it right along and have for a number of years."

LURE OF NAHANNI

Seeking Trace of Hidden Mother Lode Over Trails Covered 16 Years Ago

ROYCROFT, Alta., July 13. (CP)—The lure of gold and the Northland's forbidden valleys of legend beckon to George Platzer, cattle rancher near here. Veteran of northern mining trails the 72-year old geologist yearns to explore Tropical Valley's gold - bearing creeks and mountains.

For years bewhiskered sourdoughs have sought the source of a mother lode secreted in an icebound Eden and guarded by a terrible, mysterious curse. Platzer visited this area, between the headwaters of the Toad and South Nahinni rivers 300 miles northwest of Fort Simpson, 16 years ago.

Twice since he has returned where countless prospectors left their bones while searching for an all-land route to the Klondike during the gold-frenzied days of '98. He is convinced there is gold, both free-milling quartz and placer, hidden away in the mountains he explored in 1920 before the legend of Tropical Valley was exploded.

Four persons are known to have met violent death while searching for riches hidden in Dead Man's Valley. There were the MacLeod brothers, William and Frank, who brought out rich samples of free-milling gold in 1906 that assayed at $5000. Returning to Fort Simpson two years later they were mysteriously shot down.

Ole Jorgeson and Phil Powers also sought the rich lode of virgin gold. They met the same fate as the MacLeods. At least four other seekers after the yellow metal took up the quest and vanished from the ken of the North. President Leigh Brintnell of Mackenzie Air Services piloted an aerial expedition into the Nahinni two years ago.

Rich Samples

As far back as 1900 an Indian named Little Nahinni brought in rich samples of quartz to the mission at Fort Liard. He refused to divulge the location of his find. Several people still living have seen coarse gold mined by the MacLeod brothers. Some of the pieces, they said, would scarcely pass through the neck of a bottle.

A student of mining in Germany and with years of experience in countless mining areas, Platzer travelled by dog team on his first visit to Nahinni's mountains, just across the boundary line into Yukon Territory. Four years later he guided the first exploratory aerial expedition into the terrain on a fruitless search.

"I know there is gold there," he said, "because I found it. On one or two creeks I found coarse placer gold. There is also free-milling quartz. I would like to go in this summer and plan on a two-year visit."

A comfortable existence on his well-ordered ranch irks the veteran pathfinder. Tall and erect, he carries his years lightly. He can still pack 100 pounds and cover 30 miles a day over rough mountainous trails.
