Boys' Club Is Well Attended

Twenty-Four Boys Nightly is Enrolment of Organization

On Saturday last the organizers of the Boys' Club held their monthly meeting for December.

The club was open twenty-three nights with a total attendance of 559 making a nightly average of 24 boys.

The monthly dime collection was $4.60.

The club has been in operation one year, having been inaugurated on December 14, 1936. The supervisors feel that a real need is being satisfied and that the few hours which they give every week is more than well repaid.

As most readers know, the club is open every night except Sundays, when all boys are welcome.

Bernice Palmer says . . .

In the light of present discoveries, it would seem the government is raising a nation of sneezers or, at least, contributing to the perpetuation of hay fever.

There was a time when scientists claimed, if they could discover the cause of an illness, they could also discover its cure. But hay fever—Ah! That's different. In fact, a recent discovery concerning hay fever promises to revolutionize the science of medicine and our attitude toward such things, making it doubtful if anyone will ever want to do anything about this particular affliction.

You see, only the highly intelligent suffer from the malady—or so scientists now say. And just who would be foolish enough to submit to a serum calculated to remove his visible sign of intelligence? Besides, it is possible hay fever in time will take on the dignity of a college degree!

You can readily see what science is now up against in its fight to eliminate hay fever. The inference is obvious. If the malady is a sign of intelligence—and we have our own mental reservations on that score—it is hardly likely that members of the intellingentzia are going to greet with enthusiasm anything that will remove it. For many it is the only hall mark of brilliance by which they may be recognized. Next time we are taken with a spasm of sneezing we will try to take consolation in that fact.

And in the United States the government seems to be doing its part to encourage hay fever—that is, if there is any basis to these theories. Goodness, judging from the number of adult and vocational classes now being sponsored by the government, we can, by peering into the future, see a nation of sneezers. Or is intelligence acquired by the kind of knowledge that causes hay fever? Maybe only the kind one is born with, and not that which develops by study, is susceptible? We will have to investigate the subject a little more thoroughly.

At any rate, the thought alone is some consolation for the afflicted. For a long time they have been the butt of many jokes and some of the afflicted, in self defense, have organized hay fever clubs. It is just another case of "He who laughs last, laughs longest" and there may come a time when those who scoffed will beg to join!

As far as we are concerned, we are content to just muddle along and save our sneezes for special occasions such as colds. Far be it from us to begrudge the hay fever victim this slight satisfaction. We are a bit curious, however, to know just how scientists are going to get around the situation.
