NEEDS OF SCHOOLS

Resuming activities after the summer vacation, the Prince Rupert Parent-Teachers' Association last evening in the auditorium of the Booth Memorial High School discussed some pressing needs of the schools in the city. Parents reported that chairs were needed in the King Edward and Borden Street Schools. The meeting decided that the matter would have to be taken up with the City Commissioner as the Association felt it was doing all it could in providing money for library and sport equipment.

For these latter purposes forty dollars was voted to each of the three large schools and ten dollars to the Seal Cove School.

A committee comprised of Mrs. George Hill, convener, Mrs. N. M. Carter, Mrs. R. M. Winslow, Mrs. T. L. Davies and Mrs. Barber was appointed to make arrangements for the annual telephone bridge.

Arthur Sutton, principal of Booth Memorial High School, gave a very timely and instructive address in which he discussed recent changes in High School organization. Showing the audience an interesting photograph of Prince Rupert's first high school in 1912 consisting of fourteen students and one teacher, Mr. Sutton traced the gradual growth in attendance from this small beginning to the large school of today with almost five hundred students and a staff of twenty teachers. This tremendous increase in High School attendance was general all over Canada and was due to several factors such as scarcity of employment, the prestige which high school education gives and the growing tendency on the part of employers to demand high school graduation as a requirement for entering their service. This increased attendance, however, brought in its train several perplexing problems in school organization. Administrators had to consider such questions as additional accomodation, and the individual differences of the students now entering high school.

Formerly only those who passed the entrance examination in Grade Eight were eligible to enter High School. Many pupils stopped at Grade Eight and those who went on to High School were a selected group. Today there was no stopping place and practically all students entered the Junior and Senior High School. Coming from different home and social environments these pupils presented many and varied individual differences. No longer could students be regimented into purely academic classes training for entrance to the University and professions. The High School had to cease being a preparatory school for the University and had to become complete in itself. To meet this situation the curriculum of the High School was radically revised in 1936. The new curriculum provided a common core of subjects called constants which all pupils must take. These were English, Social Studies, Health and Physical Education, Library and Guidance. Electives leading along different channels, were also provided to complete the students' course. There were academic, commercial, science, technical and general electives which the student could choose in accordance with his interests or his future vocational aims. In a composite high school such as there was in Prince Rupert this catering to individual difficulties and interests caused perplexing problems regarding accommodation and teaching personnel.

Groups of forty would be together in classes for constants, Mr. Sutton said, but for electives would be split up into three or more smaller groups for which rooms and teachers must be found.

Compulsory Guidance

Guidance was compulsory in all grades and parents could help the school if they would discuss future vocations with their children and so help them to make wise choices of courses and subjects. All students were now prepared for High School graduation which could be obtained with university electives or technical or commercial electives. This did away with the idea that matriculation was for bright students and encouraged parents to see that their children followed the curriculum which was best suited to their needs.

During the evening Mrs. T. L. Davies and Mrs. J. H. Nordan provided a very pleasing musical program with skillfully rendered pianoforte duets. Refreshments were served at the close of the meeting.

It's the cumulative effect of advertising that counts.

Editorial

EQUAL PAY PROBLEM

"I would not mind going to the the war if I was sure that everybody would get paid the same and that there were no war profiteers." That was an expression heard recently from a young man who evidently had been considering the possibility of enlisting. He thought that, if the soldiers were paid only $1.25 a day and board, all other people in the country should live on a similar amount.

We have no intention just now of discussing the ethical principle at stake in connection with this point of view but simply point out that they had just the same idea when the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics was formed in Russia and they gave the system a trial. Pretty soon the leaders acknowledged their mistake and decided to pay each man what he was worth instead of placing them all on a level. Today the officials, including the police, consider themselves on a different plane from the common people whom they look down upon. There is growing up a bureaucracy that somewhat resembles the Family Compact of Canada in the early days of this country's national history.

The Soviets may have been wrong in abondoning their first efforts toward equality but the fact that they did so indicates that it was not a success and that they did not consider its continuation to be feasible.

CURIOUS ARGUMENT

It has been suggested that some people might be willing to fight to defend the continent of America from invaders but they would not be willing to fight for the cause of democracy against the dictators. They must have what might be called a geographical mind. It would not be a case of right or wrong but of locality.

Our idea is that right is right and wrong is wrong, wherever it may be. We also believe it is wrong for one country to try to dominate the world by force and that, wherever an attempt is made to do this, it is the moral duty of all free people to try to stop it, even at the risk of their lives.
