Whifflets
From The Waterfront

Running some twelve hours late, Union steamer Catala, Capt. A. C. McLennan, arrived in port at 5:30 this morning from the south and sailed at 10 a.m. for Stewart and other northern points whence she will return here tomorrow afternoon southbound.

Union steamer Camosun, Capt James Watt, arrived in port at 8:30 last night from Vancouver via the Queen Charlotte Islands with passengers, mail and freight and sails at 10 o'clock on her return south over the same route. On the southbound voyage the Camosun will pick up 100 loggers from the A. P. Allison Logging Co. camp at Cumshewa Inlet, it being closed down. Immediately following arrival at Vancouver, the Camosun will turn back to Cumshewa to take south another large party of loggers. With the regular sailing from Vancouver on December 17, the Cassiar, formerly Prince John, will take up the service between Vancouver and Prince Rupert via the Islands.

C.P.R. steamer Princess Norah, Capt. William Palmer, due by schedule in port this afternoon from Alaska, was anchored in thick fog near Ketchikan at 2 p.m. and will not be here until this evening at the earliest.

THEIR MORALE CAUSES NAZIS TO GRUMBLE

Obviously amused, two English women are shown emerging from the wreckage of their home and carrying a few prized family possessions, house plants and a clock. German newspapers recently voice puzzlement over the non co-operation of the British with the German attempt to crack their morale.

REBUILDING OLD LONDON

Higgledy-Piggledy Jumble Will Be Beautifully Replaced

"The London that will be built after victory is won will be more sanitary and more beautiful than the higgledy-piggledy jumble of houses, flats, offices and public buildings which grew through the centuries on the banks of the Thames."

This is an extract from a leading Canadian newspaper and the same sentiment has been expressed in scores of publications all over this continent.

Troops In Desert Burrow To Safety

It's Not Difficult to Outwit Italian Bombers in Arid Fighting

WITH THE BRITISH ARMY IN THE WESTERN DESERT, Dec. 9: (CP)—British troops in this hot, desolate region, have become sand-hogs. The great empire military establishment has gone below the desert sands which provide perhaps the world's best camouflage.

Tents are pitched in sand pits and are sand-bagged to the roof. Entering each headquarters is like penetrating an Egyptian tomb in the Valley of Kings. They are dug deep and reinforced to be proof against direct hits.

So effective has the burrowing been that owing to scarcity of targets Italian raiders often release their bombs anywhere in the desert in the thousand-to-one chance of hitting something.

Man in the Moon

Poor old Mussolini,
Sticking out his chin,
What a happy time he has
With his German twin.
He may have to swallow
Castor oil and rue
Just the way he often
Made his people do.

A speaker at the fishery dinner the other night told a story in which he said that a fisherman died and, curiously enough, went to heaven. Being shown around his new abode he saw in one place a group of fishermen looking thin and emaciated. Each man had a spoon tied to his arm in such a way that, while there was plenty of food offering, the men could not bend their arms and feed themselves. Later he came to a group of lawyers with similar spoons attached to their arms in a similar manner. These men all looked sleek and fat. He found that they fed each other. Returning to the fishermen he asked why they did not do the same. One spoke up and asked "Do you think I'd feed that blankety blank sun of a gun Jones?" The moral is obvious.

An Englishman, being warned by an air raid warden to take cover, replied: "I've got to pay for the war. Can't I look at it?"

Most girls say they do not want to get married. Then the wrong man comes along and they change their story.

A pal of mine got married and a lot of us thought he hadn't picked the right sort.

"He calls her his treasure," someone told me.

"Oh?" I said. "I wonder where he dug her up?"

"After a while I could see he was getting fed up with married life, and he used to stay out terribly late.

I said to him one day: "Does your missus still keep a light burning till you get home at three in the morning?"

"Yes," he said. "The light of battle in her eyes."

Then I met him again only yesterday, and he didn't look too good.

Out late again last night?" I asked him.

"That's right."

"What did your wife say when you got home?"

"Nothing much—and I was going to have that tooth out anyway."

A story is told of a well-known Presbyterian divine who flourished in Ulster many years ago. After exhorting a back-slider among his flock long, earnestly—and vainly—he raised his clenched fist—it was no small one: "You'll go to hell," he thundered. "You'll go to hell as surely as I'll crush that fly." The fist descended, but the insect avoided fate, and buzzed away unharmed. The chagrined minister silently followed its flight. "Well, well," he said at length, reluctantly, "I am afraid, though he was a good man the Lord is merciful and long-suffering. There may be a chance for you yet."

A missing dog in an Indiana town came home with the paper in which his loss was advertised. I'd like to claim this is another proof of the power of advertising; but the facts are rather more suggestive that the newspaper concerned may be just going to the dogs.

"Listen, ducks; we're going to have a grand time tonight."

"Oh, really?"

"Yes. I've got two tickets for a symphony concert."

"But I hate symphony concerts."

"Yes, I know. But your father and mother love 'em."

STORY OF INVENTOR

"Edison, the Man" Feature Picture On Capitol Screen For First Half of This Week

With Spencer Tracy again portraying a real life character role, "Edison, the Man" comes to the screen of the Capitol Theatre here for the first half of this week as an outstanding feature offering.

The picture opens with a prologue showing Edison at eighty-two and then fades back to his arrival in New York in 1869, carrying him through the invention of the talking machine and finally the electric light in 1879. The romantic life of the inventor, his struggles against creditors, the near death of his baby son from escaping gas and his race against time to illuminate New York on a deadline are among the highlights of the picture.

While the picture follows the biographical phases of Edison's life, it is replete with drama and thrills all of which were based on the famous inventor's actual life story.

Rita Johnson plays the feminine lead as Edison's sweetheart and wife. Others in a distinguished group of supporting players include Lynne Overman, Charles Coburn, Gene Lockhart, Henry Travers and Felix Bressart.
