WHEN THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT WENT TUNA FISHING AT BRETON

GOT A BITE THAT TOWED THE ROYAL MOTOR BOAT AROUND AT A DIZZY PACE FOR SOME TIME.

While visiting Cape Breton His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught had an experience which must have been a welcome change from the customary receptions and hand shakings, etc., which are the prerogative of the representatives of royalty en tour.

more concerned in the fishing industry than in anything else. The proper arrangements had been made by the Duke, who went about the job of tuna fishing like the experienced sportsman that he is.

The Duke went fishing. Do not imagine for a moment that His Royal Highness took a trout and spent the day beside a babbling brook. That is not the way to fish in Cape Breton. The proper thing to do is to go to St. Ann's Bay after the giant tuna and endeavor to catch one of these marine monsters with a hook and line.

The fish that took the royal hook evidently did not get it far enough down his "tummy lum," but it held him long enough to give the Governor General an extremely interesting period of real sport, for he towed the royal motor boat around at a dizzy pace for some time.
