NATIVE SCHOOLS BEING STAFFED

Commenting upon statements made recently in connection with the failure to get the native school at Greenville village on the Naas River opened, 60 children there being unable as a result to receive proper education, Indian Agent F. Earl Anfield stated that no less than three teachers had been arranged for to come to that school since the opening of the term last fall but none of them had actually arrived to take up the appointment. Greenville is the only native school in the agency now without a teacher and, Mr. Anfield adds, there are fewer native schools in the province without teachers now than in years.

Is First Woman Patent Examiner

OTTAWA, (AP) — Men in the Canadian government patent office here thought it was all a joke, but 23-year old Eleanor Krys of Edmonton was deadly serious when she arrived recently to take over the post of Canada's first woman patent examiner.

"They all greeted me with a big laugh when I was introduced," she says, "they thought it was a joke. But they came up afterwards to apologize and to say in some bewilderment. "You mean really?"

When she was interviewed at an Edmonton civil service office last fall, the examiner just shook his head and reluctantly agreed to entertain the application.

"It is the first time a girl has shown any interest in this work," he said.

Eleanor graduated last May from the University of Alberta. She took a general science course and now is in the chemistry division of the patent office.

"At first I was a little disappointed that it's strictly a desk job; I had hoped for lab work. It's a wonderful opportunity to learn a lot more about chemistry though, and few people know anything about it."

Sitting at her desk—where a woman has never sat before—she laughs at the advice a friend once gave her.

"She told me never to set a precedent."
